House Drops Market Rule For Wheat by Vote of 85-76

Quota System Killed on Motion by Coffee, of Nebraska.

Jones Balks Rising Farm Bill Attack

Frazier Assails Wallace for Holding Measure Goes 'Too Far.'

By the narrow margin of nine votes, the House yesterday voted, 85-76, to drop compulsory control of wheat marketing from the farm bill.

The action highlighted a day of steady attacks on the bill in both Houses, with Senator Lynn J. Frazier (Republican), North Dakota, assailing in the Senate the "attitude" of Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace. Wallace has criticised the Senate bill as "going too far."

Representative Gerald J. Boileau (Progressive), Wisconsin, believing the House's tentative abandonment of the marketing quota system of control for wheat meant a general distaste for quotas, took the floor to denounce the bill generally and to move that it be reported back to the House with the enacting clause stricken.

Jones Cracks Whip.

The usually well-groomed Representative Marvin Jones (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, marched to the well of the House with his hair awry and his tie askew to condemn Boileau's proposal in strong language, saying:

"You see what a jam you get in when you follow the wishes of the gentleman from Wisconsin. He wants to wreck this bill. He says there's nothing left in it. I'm amazed at that statement as much as I am at the action of one-third of the members, unrepresentative of the whole House, in adopting the Coffee amendment."

Other Action Scarce.

Representative Harry B. Coffee (Democrat), Nebraska, was author of the amendment eliminating wheat quotas.

Immediately after Jones' appeal, which ended on the note that a farm depression would "banish smoke from the chimneys of industry," the House voted down the Boileau motion, 144 to 42.

Aside from the farm bill votes, action was scarce on the Hill yesterday. The House Labor Committee authorized Chairman Mary Norton, of New Jersey, to draft an amendment placing administration of the wages-hours bill under the Labor Department and Senate and House Banking Committees heard witnesses on the private housing bill. Mrs. Norton told an American

15 Children Hurt As Ceiling Falls Upon 31 Pupils

Oklahoma City, Dec. 6 (AP).—Fifteen children were injured, one critically, here today when a schoolroom ceiling crashed down on 31 pupils.

The pupils were caught just after the teacher, Miss Ila Chapman had ordered them to flee.

Fire Chief George Goff said the ceiling collapse was due to faulty construction. He ordered the school closed.

Special Movie Program For Children

Proceeds to Underprivileged Alley Children of Washington

The Annual Movie Benefit Party for the underprivileged alley children of Washington will be held this Saturday under the sponsorship of The Post, R. K. O.-Keith's and the D. C. Federation of Church Women — at Keith's Theater, 15th St. near G St.

The only admission is one new toy.

Have your son or daughter, little brother or sister participate in this great charity event. The children will enjoy this fine program—and Washington's underprivileged children will enjoy the toys your children bring for admission.

Railroad Veteran Realizes Ambition

J. B. WEYMES,
71-year-old engineman of the Atlantic Coast Line, achieved a long-cherished ambition when he grasped the throttle of President Roosevelt's train on the 172-mile run between Rocky Mount, N. C., and Richmond. Although not his turn to relieve, another man deferred to him so he could have the honor of piloting a Presidential special before retiring in a few months after 52 years' service.

Roosevelt's Jaw Is X-Rayed On His Return From Vacation

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt, back in the White House last night after a shortened vacation in the South, submitted to a dental examination.

The examination centered on a gum pocket still draining after a tooth extraction November 18. Slow healing of the cavity prompted the Chief Executive to trim three days off his 12-day itinerary so he could receive dental treatment here.

X-ray pictures taken last night will determine whether the jawbone should be scraped to prevent spreading of any infection.

Capt. Ross T. McIntire, his naval physician, said:

"He got ten hours sleep on the train last night. He feels fine, but his jaw is still sensitive. The combination of a gastro-intestinal disorder and the bad gum had him feeling a little low for three or four days, but he has regained strength and is now feeling shipshape."

Sand Magnate Gone, $100,000 Ransom Hinted

New York Man's Family Denies Kidnaping, but Police Investigate.

By the Associated Press.

White Plains, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The strange disappearance of Arthur Fried, 32-year-old New York business executive, from his home in this smart Westchester suburb Saturday night was made known today when his family denied reports that he had been kidnaped for $100,000 ransom.

Fried's family expressed belief Fried had taken "a drink too many," or that he might have quarreled with a member of the family.

In spite of these denials, Detective Lieut. Edward J. Hughes and a half dozen other detectives were investigating Fried's absence. Reports persisted that agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation from New York City had been called.

Fried, a small, dark-complexioned man, is manager of the Bronx office of the Colonial Sand & Stone Co., of which Generoso Pope, the Italian publisher, is president and a director.

He attended a movie Saturday night with his wife, Harold Daniels, a brother-in-law, and Mrs. Daniels, his sister. On the way home, they told police later, they stopped out-

Congress Votes Self $222,000 As Yule 'Bonus'

Fights Forgotten as Blocs Unite to Pass Bill for Mileage.

By Sidney Olson.

Tired of three weeks of talk without action, Congress yesterday rose in its full legislative might to vote its members the fat sum of $222,000 in mileage allowances for the special session.

The sum, breaking down into $172,000 for the House and $50,000 for the Senate, will amount to a Christmas bonus for all members who do not travel home between the session's closing date, December 22, and the regular session's opening date, January 3.

The mileage appropriation was the second "major" measure in the President's emergency session that has shot through to smashing victory on both sides. The first was an appropriation of $12,000 to pay salaries of House and Senate pages.

Republicans toyed with the situation happily, hinting that the measure took the place of Santa Claus this year, on the theory that only a few members from nearby districts would leave Washington for the holidays.

Research disclosed that Representative Martin F. Smith (Demo-

NLRB Power Seen Periling Free Speech

Director Quizzed to Show Link to Mill Where Strike Was On.

An apparent conflict between the powers of subpena granted the National Labor Relations Board and constitutional freedom of the press and speech was disclosed yesterday in official records of a cross-examination given a small-town editor.

Board officials cross-examined the editor, Harry T. O'Brien, of the St. Mary's (Pa.) Daily Press, as to why he wrote articles critical of the board and of the Committee for Industrial Organization, and as to who wrote communications published in his newspaper making the same criticisms.

The board refused to regard as confidential the name of the writer of the communications. It also refused to accept testimony as to the author's competence. It wanted to know who determined the editor's salary and if he might lose his job if he wrote views contrary to those of a director of the paper who also was an official of the Stackpole Carbon Co., which was involved in labor troubles reported by the Daily Press.

Editor Refuses Reply.

At one point Macht demanded that O'Brien reveal the name of the writer of an editorial published last February 26. It was written by Ruth S. Sanders, wife of an engineer employed by the Carbon Co., herself a former member of the staff of the Rocky Mountain News, Denver.

"I would rather not," O'Brien replied.

"You may read it," he was told by the trial examiner.

"I don't believe I am required to," O'Brien responded.

"On what ground?"

"I believe it is a violation of the confidence which the editor has with anybody who submits articles on the same grounds as the violation of a confidence between lawyer and client, and physician and his patient."

Reads Subpena Clause.

"Who told you all that?" Bayly said, and followed with:

"Are you trying to raise the question of privilege?"

"I am."

"You were subpenaed to come here to testify?"

"Yes, I obeyed the subpena," the editor replied.

Bayly responded by reading section 2, paragraph 3, "passed by our Congress, the Federal Congress, the National Congress," which reads as follows:

" 'No person shall be excused from attending and testifying . . . in

F. B. I. Agent Shot; Extortionist Flees

Federal Bureau of Investigation headquarters here reported last night one of its agents was shot and wounded at Independence, Mo., in an attempt to trap an alleged extortionist.

Federal agents, F. B. I. headquarters said, accompanied Howard Boone Jacobs, of Independence to a spot designated in a note received by Boone.

Boone, following instructions, dropped a bundle supposed to contain $600 demanded in the note.

A man, believed to have been the note writer, opened fire and Federal Agent H. A. Snow fell. The man escaped.

City Surrounded On South, East

BULLETIN.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Tuesday), Dec. 7.—A stern protest from Great Britain was received by Japanese naval authorities today as the vanguard of Nippon's legions drove to the massive walls of Nanking and prepared to lay siege to the capital from which the Chinese government fled two weeks ago.

The protest, lodged by Vice Admiral Sir Charles Little, commander of Britain's Far Eastern naval forces, followed Japanese aerial bombing of two British merchant ships and damage to a British gunboat at Wuhu. The commander of the British gunboat Ladybird and two other Britons were wounded by shrapnel during the attack.

Nanking Half Surrounded.

Japanese officials declined immediate comment on the protest.

At the same time Japanese army authorities reported Nanking, at dawn, was surrounded on the south and east.

Japanese units rolled up artillery for a bombardment and throughout the early hours troops massed along the tightening front preparatory to attack.

Japanese officials said a spearhead was thrusting toward the Yangtze River which would cut off Nanking completely except on the river side.

Japanese correspondents with the troops reported Nanking's eastern suburbs, including the mausoleum of Sun Yat-sen, father of the Chinese republic, and the mansion of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, already were in the invaders' hands.

The $3,000,000 tomb of Sun Yat-sen, one of the world's most impressive monuments, set on the slope of the famous Purple Mountain, has been considered the shrine of modern China.

Fires Rage in Nanking.

The district surrounding it, containing many fine government buildings, held the outstanding material achievement of the Nationalist government of China, the regime of Nanking and Chiang Kai-shek which many Japanese leaders have said must be destroyed.

Correspondents said fires were raging in Nanking, throwing up smoke columns that could be seen miles away.

A brief dispatch from within the city said the great gates were being closed and strengthened with sandbag barricades. The Chinese apparently were preparing for a stand within the city, with its 32-mile-long walls, from 30 to 50 feet high, the greatest in China.

By Franklyn Waltman.

In the first official American comment on the changes in the government of Brazil last month, Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles last night clearly indicated that the United States Government, instead of regarding the Vargas administration as a Fascist regime, believes that South American country is doing its share in maintaining unbroken the democratic front of the Western hemisphere.

Speaking at George Washington University's Pan American forum, which opened last night at the United States Chamber of Commerce auditorium, Welles did not say this in so many words. But his address was not susceptible of any other interpretation.

Since the Undersecretary of State is this Government's foremost authority on Latin-American problems, his words assumed an authoritative nature and may be regarded as the attitude of the United States toward the Vargas regime in Brazil. Previously, he had declined to make publicly any observations regarding the recent developments in Brazil.

(Editor's note: The Post, on November 12, the day after the Vargas coup d'etat in Brazil became known, published a story by Waltman in which he reported that, while retaining silence, officials of this Government were not anxious or concerned over what had happened in Brazil. He indicated American officials were not taking seriously contentions Brazil had gone Fascist and was breaking away from the democracies of the Western hemisphere.)

Taking as his topic "the need for a spirit of tolerance in inter-Amer-

Sabotage Hinted In Ship Damage

New Orleans, Dec. 6 (U.P.).—Department of Justice agents tonight undertook investigation of the alleged sabotage of the seatrain Havana after Capt. J. C. Wenzel told a maritime hearing a "union agitator" promised "plenty of hell before long."

Wenzel reported on the burning out of steam turbine bearings of the Havana Thursday 35 miles southeast of the mouth of the Mississippi River. He said "it appears that someone is maliciously trying to damage the seatrain."

Possible Helium Source Found in 'Mystery' Well

Miami's Heatless Schools Close as Cold Wave Nears

Miami, Dec. 6 (AP).—Approaching low temperatures caused officials tonight to order closing of Greater Miami schools for tomorrow and possibly longer.

Chairman Van E. Blanton of the school board said health might be endangered if classes were held since few persons had heavy clothing and schools were without heating plants.

Coldest Weather Of Fall Forecast

As snow and ice covered many Virginia highways, the Weather Bureau predicted yesterday that the mercury here would drop during the night to 18 degrees, the lowest point this season. The midnight reading was 28. Partly cloudy and continued cold was forecast for today.

Parts of Skyline Drive and highlands of western Maryland were blanketed by snow, and 2 inches of snow made motor traffic hazardous in the Winchester area. Hills and curves on main roads are being sanded, the Virginia Highway Department said.

From a high temperature of 36 at 7 a. m., yesterday, the mercury fell gradually through the day to freezing late in the afternoon. Slowly rising temperatures were forecast for tomorrow.

Intruder Shot At Hitler Home; Held in Hospital

Official Grapples With Man Looting Desk at Chancellery.

By the United Press.

Berlin, Dec. 6.—A man of undisclosed identity is being held in a hospital at Buch, near Berlin, suffering from a shot in the knee received when he was found in the Reich chancellery—home of Fuehrer Adolf Hitler—two weeks ago, it was revealed tonight.

The man is under observation in a mental ward of the Buch Hospital, to which he was transferred from a police hospital.

It was learned that the marauder is about 40 years old and has stubbornly refused to talk.

The man was shot as he fled through corridors of the chancellery in an effort to escape from secret police and Nazi storm troops attracted by the shouts of an official who grappled with the intruder, it was reported.

Without being challenged he had gone to the second floor to the offices of Hitler and Der Fuehrer's secretary of state, Hans Heins Lammers.

He was reported to have been seeking something in the desk when he was surprised.

Actor Keeps Time On Harmonica as Saw Cuts Off Leg

"And I tried to keep the music in time with the Doctor's saw," he remarked cheerfully today.

The man was Fred La Reine, a vaudeville performer for 25 years.

La Reine, who on the stage ran heavy electric currents through his body and massaged himself with lighted torches, was injured in an automobile accident.

Grace Moore's Birthday Party Costs Escort Couple of Teeth

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 6.—Grace Moore's birthday party at El Morocco Club last night ended in a flurry of fisticuffs and an unidentified male member of her party lost a couple of teeth.

As in most of these night club tangles, everybody was pretty vague about details, but ringsiders re-constructed the affair like this:

The singer went to the club with Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett, Frank Chapman, Mrs. Valentine Schley, coutouriere, and the unidentified man;

Drinks were ordered, including a brandy breather glass of champagne (one quart) for Miss Moore;

The club passed out to the ladies its special-occasion mock corsages of vegetables;

And J. McKinley Bryant, sportsman-author and luminary of a couple of other night club bouts who was sitting at a nearby table, socked the unidentified man.

Miss Moore was reticent today, said it must have happened after she'd gone home.

Coughlin to Renew Series Over Radio

Detroit, Dec. 6 (AP).—Father Charles E. Coughlin, who abandoned radio talks a few months ago subsequent to differences with his archbishop later climaxed by an indirect reproof from Rome, announced plans tonight to return to the air shortly after January 1.

Father, Ill, Refuses to Leave for an Operation Unless Family Is Cared For in His Absence

MR. R NEEDS AN OPERATION, but he refuses to go to the hospital. Before he goes he must know that his family of wife and five children will be taken care of during his convalescence.

His income from this business has netted him from $60 to $70 monthly for the past several years. These earnings, plus a partial disability pension of $13.50 a month, have been all the R family has had to live on, but with good management it has been sufficient.

Naturally, no savings have accumulated. For the past three weeks Mr. R has been unable to carry on his partnership due to his illness. When Mr. R fails to work, his income stops. The operation can be secured without cost, because of Mr. R's Army service. The doctor says that within two months after the operation he should be back at work.

The R family has never been on relief. Mrs. R came to a welfare agency week before last and asked for aid—smothering her pride because her family was threatened with eviction.

When she was told there was no help in sight, her spirits flagged. She borrowed $13.50 from her Sunday school teacher, to be paid back when Mr. R's pension came.

Mr. R is not eligible for public-assistance relief funds unless he is sick at least three months.

The welfare agency which investigated the case said Mrs. R said she could get along for two months on $125. "How she could manage on that is difficult to see, but in her courageous way she says she thinks she could," the agency worker said.

No. 6—The R Family

The Post today presents the sixth case among the 25 neediest families of the District's unemployables, for whom its Christmas fund will be collected. There is no relief fund for them. They are deserving cases, investigated by an agency of the Council of Social Agencies. Their need is measured in terms of money. Unless they are helped now, the amount they need later will be much larger.

Do you want to help put Mr. R back on his job and keep his five children from becoming public wards? If so, send your contribution to The Washington Post Christmas Fund and mark it "For the R Family."

States Upheld In Taxing Pay For U. S. Work

Supreme Court Also Opens Way for Aluminum Trust Attack.

By Robert C. Albright.

The Supreme Court yesterday opened the door for States to tax income of independent Government contractors but again ruled against "any taxation by one government of the salary of an officer of the other, or the public securities of the other."

The 5-to-4 opinion of the court on two nearly identical State tax cases was under close scrutiny last night by experts of the House Ways and Means Committee, seeking judicial light on the untapped basin of Federal-State tax immunities.

Although the decision offered little encouragement to the House search for a way to tax interest on tax-exempt securities and salaries of State employes, Chairman Fred M. Vinson, of the House tax subcommittee, withheld judgment last night pending analysis of the rulings.

Meanwhile, the Government won from the court the right to continue proceedings in the Southern District of New York to dissolve the Aluminum Co. of America. One of more than a score of opinions by the high tribunal upheld a decision by a three-judge circuit court at Philadelphia legalizing Government prosecution of anti-trust charges against the company.

Dissent Vigorous.

Attorney General Homer Cummings immediately hailed the ruling as a "go ahead" signal for Government prosecution and said it severed legal "red tape."

The opinion was rendered by Justice McReynolds. Justices Hughes and Stone failed to participate but there was no dissent.

But there was a vigorous minority finding by Justice Roberts and three colleagues opposing the majority decision by Chief Justice Hughes that a State can tax gross receipts of an independent contractor for the Government, received from activities within the border of a State.

The two suits, on both of which the court split, 5 to 4, involved taxes imposed by Washington State and West Virginia on income received for building locks and dams for the Federal Government.

In the West Virginia suit, brought by the Dravo Contracting Co., of Pittsburgh, Hughes ruled that the State's 2 per cent gross income tax "does not interfere in any substantial way with the performance of Federal functions and is a valid exaction."

In the Washington State case, brought by the Silas Mason Co., Inc., Walsh Construction Co. and the Atkinson-Kier Co., engaged in work on the Grand Coulee Dam, Hughes ruled that the State's one-half per cent gross income levy "does not lay an unconstitutional burden upon the Federal Government."

The House Ways and Means Committee had been awaiting the opinions in hopes they would clear up doubts in the field of State salary and securities exemptions. But Hughes drew a sharp line of distinction between income of Government contractors and other types of immunities.

"There is no ineluctable logic which makes the doctrine of immunity with respect to Government bonds applicable to the earnings of an independent contractor rendering services to the Government," ruled the Chief Justice, who was joined by Justices Brandeis, Stone, Cardozo and Black.

Novel Move Weighed.

Hughes said the court previously had decided taxes on interest from Government securities were "laid on the Government's contract—upon the power to borrow money—and hence were invalid."

Hughes was of the opinion that tax immunity of public securities would be equally violated whether the tax was on net or gross income.

"The pith of the decision in the case of Metcalf & Eddy is that Government bonds and contracts for the services of an independent contractor are not upon the same footing," Hughes said.

In his 19-page dissenting opinion, Justice Roberts, joined by Justices McReynolds, Sutherland and Butler, defended the "settled rule that a State may not, by taxation, burden or impede the United States in the exercise of its delegated powers." He said the majority ruling overrules "a century of precedents" and leaves the rule of immunity "uncertain and unpredictable."

"I agree," said Roberts, "that the challenged tax is not, in terms, laid upon the contract of the Government, but I am of opinion that it directly burdens and impedes the operations of the United States within reason and scope of the principle of immunity and according to the application of that principle in numerous decisions of the court."

Roberts said immunity from State taxation "upon the means, the operations and the instruments of the Government is just as firmly established as is the immunity from taxation of the Government's property or offices or posts created by it," and neither class of taxation is justifiable.

Another significant high court ruling yesterday upheld validity of the Georgia $1-a-year poll tax on male voters. The law, which forbids a male citizen of Georgia from voting until he has paid all accumulated poll taxes, was rendered by Justice Butler and there was no dissent.

Politics and People

Muddled, Indefinite Thinking Hampers Republicans in Planning New Platform.

By Franklyn Waltman

OBVIOUSLY, a great ferment is going on within the Republican Party. Dissatisfaction with the role which the party is playing in national affairs has become widespread. No articulate Republican seems pleased with the way things are going in his party and the cry for change, once raised only by Senator William E. Borah, now is general.

WALTMAN.

This is obvious from the results of Dr. George Gallup's poll of "grass roots" Republicans published in The Post on Sunday. It is obvious from the letter which Gov. George D. Aiken of Vermont has sent to the Republican National Committee. Both the results of the Gallup poll and the Aiken letter are intensely interesting documents and they may mark the beginning of the resurrection of the Republican Party—they may, if the best minds in the Republican Party go to work on the problem honestly and determinedly.

But while the cry for change is approaching unanimity, there is a great divergence of opinion as to what change should be made, possibly resulting from confused thinking about the deficiencies of the Republican Party. One element insists that the leadership of the party is wrong and should be changed. Another, believing the leadership is paralyzed by reactionary policies, demands a new program. Still others regard the party as beyond saving and would form a new political instrumentality through coalition with conservative Democrats.

The difficulty, however, with most of the methods proposed for resurrection of the Republican Party is that they start at the wrong end. Instead of thinking in terms of principles and what is best for the general and lasting welfare of the country, Republicans are thinking in terms of votes.

Thus, Chairman John Hamilton asserts the party leadership in the last campaign "forgot the men and women who live across the tracks in American life" and the inference that flows from his words is that the party must reorient itself to attract the votes of the lower third of Americans. But he does not propose specific steps to achieve this result.

Gov. Aiken believes the party should make a greater appeal to the youth of the Nation, but he does not specify, except to say that Republicans should place on youth "the serious responsibilities of party leadership." But the Republican Party has done that and Gov. Aiken is in error when he asserts that "we have become a party of old men." He is only 45 years old. John Hamilton is the same age, four years younger than Jim Farley. Alf Landon is but 50. Senators H. Styles Bridges and Henry Cabot Lodge are among the youngest men in the Senate. Senator Arthur Vandenberg is but 53. Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., is the same age.

Compared to Democratic Publicity Director Charles Michelson, Hill Blackett and Alfred H. Kirchhofer, who directed Republican publicity in the campaign, were kids. Charles P. Taft, Ralph West Robey, Prof. Glenn Saxon and other members of the Landon "brain trust" were no more advanced in years than those who served President Roosevelt in a similar capacity.

No, there is no political magic in youth—indeed, as in other walks of life, youth, with its vigor and impetuousness cannot take the place of experience and seasoned judgment. The youths in President Roosevelt's Administration are responsible for many of his misadventures and supply the Republicans with their best targets.

Gov. Aiken is on more solid ground when he would curb the influence of Southerners on the Republican National Committee. With several exceptions, they are a sorry lot and have done as much to bring the party into odium as any other group. But while curbing their influence would be desirable, it would not contribute a great deal to solving the party's trouble, for they have been and are a minority.

And then there are vague, abstract proposals that the party should become more liberal or social-minded. Dr. Gallup, misinterpreting, I think, the results of his own survey, asserted that "they (apparently a majority of Republicans polled) want the Republican Party to be more liberal in its social and economic viewpoint." Yet the figures on which he bases his conclusion show that 47 per cent of those polled think the party should be "more liberal" than in 1936, while 41 per cent think it should remain "about the same, and 12 per cent think it should be more conservative.

True it is that almost four times as many Republicans believe it should become more liberal than those who wish it to be more conservative. But the important fact is that 53 per cent wish it to remain as it is or become more conservative, as against 47 per cent favoring liberalizing measures. Moreover, of the six propositions listed by Dr. Gallup which "grass root" Republicans would make issues, only one would be a liberalization of the party's 1936 position and that—"a policy favorable to labor"—is listed last.

This, perhaps, is quibbling and it is not important. The words "liberal," "conservative," "reactionary" and the like have become meaningless abstractions, used to cover up an inability to think clearly or to a purpose. The word "liberal" has come to mean many things to many men and much in the New Deal that is described as "liberal" is, by the old standards, reactionary. Many people seem to think that a "liberal" politician is one who is generous with the taxpayers' money.

Thus, the Republicans get no place talking about "going over the railroad tracks" or attracting youth, or being liberal. The requirement which they must meet is the formulation of a program which in all its particulars is, in the light of history and man's experience and within the framework of American Government, dedicated to the general welfare of the country—irrespective of whether it helps or hurts a particular class.

And it is a safe bet such a program will appeal to all classes. Despite his assaults on the wealthy, President Roosevelt is not a class President. It is true that his greatest strength is in the lower one-third of the population, but he also, according to the Gallup poll, remains the choice of 66 per cent of the middle class, and of 46 per cent of the upper third.

Adoption of such a program may not bring victory to the Republicans in 1938 or even in 1940. Intelligence and virtue do not always triumph at the polls. But adherence to such a program would permit the Republicans to be a militant, self-respecting opposition—which they are not today—and would clothe them with the attributes of an acceptable second choice when circumstances reach the point where the popular mind turns against the New Deal. Today there is no choice.

House G. O. P. Submits Bill to Cut Taxes Now

House Republicans yesterday laid before Congress a plan for immediate repeal of the undivided profits tax and sharp modification of the capital gains tax.

A bill seeking action at once "to check the distressing spread of unemployment" was introduced in the House by Representative Allen T. Treadway, of Massachusetts, ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Treadway, who said his bill was "pursuant to the unanimous resolution of the Republican caucus last week," cited President Roosevelt's assent to tax revision "as soon as Congress is ready," and declared the Republican measure could be enacted "within ten days."

The bill proposed retroactive repeal of the undivided profits tax. In its place, the measure would increase prevailing normal income rates on corporate income by 1 per cent in each bracket. Prevailing normal rates range from 8 to 15 per cent. The Republican range would begin at 9 per cent for net incomes up to $2,000, and increase to 16 per cent for net incomes over $40,000.

The proposed capital gains tax modification would substitute a flat rate of 12½ per cent on all capital gains for the prevailing sliding scale of rates that range up to 79 per cent in the highest bracket.

The minority measure, which cuts far under modifications already proposed by the Ways and Means Tax Sub-committee, was dropped into the House hopper while the regular sub-committee was approving new changes in administrative features of the present law as an aid to the taxpayer.

The latest sub-committee revisions approved yesterday would permit deduction of total capital losses from income taxable under the capital gains and losses tax, and suspend the statute of limitations as it applies to the time over which losses are incurred.

Previously, the sub-committee had approved exemption of corporations earning up to $25,000 from the undivided profits tax, substituting normal income taxes of from 12½ to 14 per cent. On earnings over $25,000, normal rates of 16 to 20 per cent would apply, with the rate rising in proportion to dividends withheld. A less drastic formula for applying capital gains taxes also has been proposed.

Davies Returns to U. S.

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—Joseph E. Davies, United States Ambassador to Russia, arrived from Europe today to spend the Christmas holidays with his wife, who returned several weeks ago. He said his trip had no political significance.

A Correction.

A statement was made in the Sixtieth Anniversary Edition of The Post that the "assets of the Acacia Insurance Company today exceed $4,000,000." The assets of this company exceed $72,000,000. The Post regrets the error.

Barkley Halts Senate Debate to Observe Col. Halsey's 40th Year of Service.

COL. EDWIN A. HALSEY'S fortieth anniversary of Senate service yesterday interrupted Senate debate when Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky, called the chamber's attention to the date. Republicans and Democrats alike joined in praising Halsey.

Barkley told how Halsey, a member of a prominent Lynchburg, Va., family, entered the service of the Senate 40 years ago as a page. He said he had risen through the display of "efficiency, loyalty and outstanding charm."

Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, said he hoped that "life begins at 40 for Col. Halsey."

Others who praised Halsey included Republican Leader McNary, of Oregon; Senator Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona; Senator Sheppard (Democrat), Texas, and Senator Pittman (Democrat), Nevada.

TWO SENATORS were ailing yesterday. One of them, however, Senator Bone (Democrat), Washington, would leave the Naval Hospital within a few days, aides said. Bone entered the hospital for observation last week after a slight attack of indigestion and throat trouble. Hospital officials said his condition at no time was serious.

Senator Connally, (Democrat, Texas), was confined to his home with a cold he contracted two weeks ago during the filibuster he led against the anti-lynch bill.

SENATOR CAPPER (Republican), Kansas, proposed "uniform regulation of marriage and divorce" by Congress through a constitutional amendment. His bill would also standardize "the legitimation of children and the care and custody of children affected by annulment of marriage or by divorce.

Capper also introduced a bill which would require a two weeks' application for license to marry, prohibit licenses to insane or those affected with certain diseases and require parental consent for marriage of young women from 16 to 18 years and young men from 18 to 21 years.

REPRESENTATIVE MANSFIELD, (Democrat, Texas), chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, said he favored boundary changes in the pending regional planning bill which would transfer the jurisdiction of developments on the Arkansas and Cumberland Rivers. The letter is now proposed for inclusion in the Tennessee Valley authority.

G-Men Investigate $100,000 Extortion

Chicago, Dec. 6 (U.P.).—A $100,000 extortion plot against Potter Palmer, wealthy society leader, is being investigated by Federal agents, the Chicago Daily News said today.

Agents questioned Palmer's neighbors in suburban Evanston about the alleged plot and rented one man's garage for an observation hideout. A woman was asked to give her fingerprints and samples of another resident's handwriting were obtained from his firm, the newspaper said.

Neither Palmer nor G-men would comment on the report.

Army Plane Lost In Island Typhoon

Manila, Dec. 6 (AP).—Cloudbursts, flooded rivers and gales ripped out communication lines today in the central Philippine archipelago as the third typhoon this season brought new destruction to the islands.

Only two deaths had been reported from today's typhoon, but an epidemic of dysentery in Sorgoson Province was taking many lives. It was traced to the storm of last November 11. The town of Bulan, alone, reported 20 dead.

An army plane bearing Maj. Gen. Pauline Santos, chief of staff of the Philippine army; Lieut William Lee, of the United States Army Air Corps, and Col. Fidel Segundo, chief of the intelligence corps of the Philippine army, were missing in southern Luzon.

Postal Revenues Gain.

Pneumonia's Mortality Off

697 Dead Since Jan. 1, Making Rate 111 Per 100,000.

Pneumonia deaths have decreased 1" per cent here this year, statistics of the health department disclosed yesterday.

Eight hundred and sixty-one persons—73 per cent of the 1,175 stricken—died in the District last year as the result of pneumonia. On the basis of the 697 deaths thus far this year, it was estimated by health officials that the total for the year would reach 76'.

During the entire year of 1936 a total of 1,175 cases of the disease was reported to the health department. Of this amount slightly more than 73 per cent resulted in death. The number of cases this year, however, has dropped below the 1,000 mark.

Computed on the 1936 census of 619,000 population, the death rate from pneumonia per 100,000 was 1" . For this year the death rate is 111 per 100,000.

Ship Firm Fails to Qualify for Permanent Award, Commission Rules.

By the Associated Press.

The Maritime Commission denied yesterday the application of the Baltimore Mail Steamship Co., of Baltimore for a permanent operating-differential subsidy contract.

The commission said the line, which operated five vessels between Baltimore and Norfolk, and Lehavre and Hamburg, failed to qualify for a permanent subsidy contract under requirements of the Merchant Marine act.

The line has been in existence since 1931. In the following two years it spent $9,256,275 equipping vessels bought from the Shipping Board.

To finance reconditioning of the vessels the company borrowed from the Shipping Boad $6,520,706 on which it has repaid only $587,600. The balance is secured by a blanket mortgage which the Government holds on all five ships.

The commission said its action in disapproving the application did not mean ... "ne would suspend operations at the expiration of its temporary subsidy contract next January 1, or that the ports the line now serves would suffer from impaired or interrupted service.

On the contrary, the commission said these ports would receive adequate if not greatly improved service by season of the realignment of American steamship lines and foreign trade routes which it was effecting in its program of rehabilitating the American Merchant Marine.

Four Pins Driven In Horse's Leg to Hold Steel Splints

Philadelphia, Dec. 6 (AP).—A little chestnut filly, Princess Jewell, hung comfortably from straps in her stall tonight waiting for her right foreleg to mend—oblivious of the fact that other good horses with broken legs usually are shot.

The five-months-old colt found a steel splint supporting her leg yesterday after she revived from an anaesthetic. A few kicks expressed her dislike and then she settled down to long weeks of hanging.

Dr. Otto Stader, head of the Ardmore Small Animal Hospital, drove four steel pins into the broken bone to hold the splint. He had used it successfully on nearly 200 dogs, but its use on a horse, especially high on the leg, was something new, Dr. Stader said.

4 Killed by Blast In Clothing Store

Gloversville, N. Y., Dec. 6 (AP).—Four persons died and one was injured today in an explosion that set fire to a children's clothing store. Cause of the blast was not known.

The dead:

TVA 'Robbing' Him of Leases Worth 3 Billions, Berry Says

Norris Reservoir Will Inundate Marble Worth More Than Dam Itself, Senator Charges.

By the Associated Press.

Knoxville, Tenn., Dec. 6.—Senator George L. Berry accused the Tennessee Valley Authority today of "robbing" him of mineral leases in the Norris Dam reservoir.

He declared it was doubtful whether the dam was as valuable as marble that has been inundated.

The statements of Tennessee's junior Senator were made at a hearing before a three-man commission appointed to determine the value of leases held by Berry and 29 other seeking damages from the Government agency.

Counsel for Berry and his associates declared witnesses would testify the marble alone under the waters of Norris Lake was worth more than three billion dollars.

The TVA took a divergent view.

Evans Dunn, counsel for the authority, told the commissioners "these leases have no market value" and "are not worth the paper they are written on."

The Senator defended his purchase of the leases and denied that he bought them with a view to seeking damages from the Government.

"I don't have to sue the Government to make a living," Berry said, his voice rising. "I've made a living since I was 9 years old and I don't have to change.

"I'm not accustomed to having people come into my home and rob me of my property and that is what the TVA has done. They've confiscated my property and I'm an American first."

Berry denied he bought the leases with knowledge the land would be flooded by Norris Dam, first link in the TVA's flood control and "yardstick" program.

Visits Planned By Lindberghs Near New York

Englewood, N. J., Dec. 6.—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh plan to visit numerous places in the metropolitan area, including the site of the New York World's Fair, during their holiday stay in this country, friends said today.

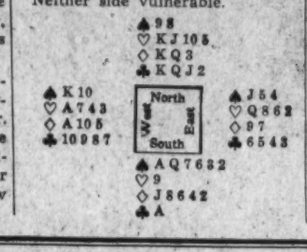
They remained at the closely-guarded estate of Mrs. Dwight Morrow, Mrs. Lindbergh's mother, throughout today as near as the general public could ascertain, although there were reports the flier and his wife slipped away to New York City.

Contract Bridge

Counting From the Bidding.

One of the great faults of the defense of many players is that they start their thinking too late. It has been pointed out many times in this colum that counting is indispensable to expert defense. Many otherwise good players have the mistaken idea that it is either impossible or unnecessary to begin this process of counting until comparatively late in the play of the cards. The falacy in this theory is well demonstrated by today's hand.

North, dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 N T	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
3 N T	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the ten of clubs, and South won with his singleton Ace. He immediately led a low diamond and West ducked. Dummy won with the King of diamonds and South discarded his heart on one of the high clubs. Now, the defenders could take only two spade tricks and the Ace of diamonds.

Had West counted declarer's hand from the information disclosed in the bidding, he would have defeated the contract. South had bid two suits, had refused at any point to consider playing the hand at notrump, and had indicated that his spade suit was considerably stronger than his diamond suit. Thus, it should not have been difficult for West to read the 6-5-1-1 distribution.

When South led a low diamond at the second trick, West should have stepped up at once with his Ace. Then he should have cashed the Ace of hearts, to prevent the discard. As a final step, he should have returned another diamond.

Now, declarer would be helpless. To finesse the Queen of spades would allow the opponents to take two natural spade tricks. It would not even do any good to lay down the Ace and a low spade. In that case, West would take his King of trumps and lead a third round of diamonds, to give his partner a ruff. Counting out declarer's hand would have shown West that it was imperative to cash the heart trick at once and to provide for a third-round diamond ruff by his partner.

Writer Will Speak.

Barnet Nover, editorial writer of The Post, will address the Institute of the Jewish Community Center at 8:30 p. m. Wednesday. His subject will be "The World Situation." Mrs. Elizabeth Kahn, of the board of the Community Center, will be chairman of the evening. The meetings of the institute are open to the public without charge.

United States Embassy officials decided the time had come for Americans to get out if they hoped to escape. Officials advised American nationals at noon they should go aboard the gunboat Panay, standing by in the Yangtze River, unless they intended to stay.

Eight Americans thereupon boarded the Panay. Seventeen remained within the city walls, but several of these were expected to go aboard the gunboat soon.

U. S. Embassy Aides Stay.

The seventeen included George Acheson, jr., and J. Hall Paxton, Embassy second secretaries; Capt. James McHugh, U. S. Marines, assistant naval attache, and Capt. Frank Roberts, assistant military attache.

Ambassador Nelson T. Johnson and the rest of the Embassy staff moved to Hankow nearly two weeks ago.

Japanese correspondents predicted capture of Nanking by tonight. A Japanese army spokesman in Shanghai said fighting in Nanking streets was to be expected today.

The last stage of the Japanese surge toward the capital apparently met with almost no resistance. From Kuyung, 22 miles to the east, which fell yesterday, the invaders advanced almost as fast as they could march. They approached Nanking by way of Kaochiaomen, a village 3 miles to the southeast.

Fuel Tanks Aflame.

A Japanese spokesman here said Nanking had been bombed from the air and fuel tanks set afire.

The Japanese also reported destruction of the boom across the Yangtze River, at Kiangyin, 90 miles east of Nanking, which hitherto had prevented Japanese warships from steaming to attack Nanking. Already Japanese men-of-war were reported moving upstream to bombard Chinkiang, 40 miles from Nanking.

A Chinese report that Japan's 32,720-ton battleship, Nagato, had been sunk by Chinese air bombs in the lower Yangtze drew derisive Japanese denials.

But the Chinese asserted that aside from the Nanking area their troops were more than holding their own. They said that along the Anhwei-Kiangsu border, southeast of Nanking, the Chinese had thrown the Japanese almost back to the shore of Lake Tai and recaptured Kwangteh and Changhsing.

Guerrillas Harass North.

Reports from scattered points in the north asserted Chinese guerrillas were harassing Japanese lines of communication and supply along all the railways by which the Japanese had driven deep into the North China provinces. It appeared that although the Japanese held the rail lines most of the hinterland was overrun by Chinese bands, many of them belonging to the Communist armies, which thrust constantly at the invaders.

In Shantung Province the Chinese declared they had pushed the Japanese back nearly 50 miles to the north of the capital, Tsinan, objective of an earlier Japanese offensive which reached the north bank of the Yellow River only five miles from the city.

A Chinese dispatch from Shansi reported 20,000 Japanese troops had marched northward through Yenmen Pass, northern gateway of the province, presumably bound for Manchuria to reinforce troops on the Siberian border.

Eden Keeps U. S. Contact.

London, Dec. 6 (U.P.).—Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, attempting to allay fears Great Britain might be drawn into armed conflict with Japan, told the House of Commons today he is maintaining constant contact with the United States Government.

The foreign secretary, facing a barrage of questions about Anglo-Japanese tension aggravated by serious incidents in the Far East in the last 48 hours, said he was "unable to accept the suggestion" that British possessions were in imminent danger.

The foreign secretary asserted that before last Friday's Japanese "victory parade" through the Shanghai International Settlement the British Ambassador to Tokyo, Sir Robert L. Craigie, protested to the Japanese that the demonstration appeared to be "most provocative and uncalled for."

Belgian King Ails; Romance Doubted

London, Dec. 6 (A.P.).—King Leopold of the Belgians, suffering from a cold, remained in the seclusion of Welbeck Abbey today while Lady Anne Cavendish-Bentnick, with whom his name was linked romantically, drove through a snowstorm to open the Christmas shopping week at worksop.

Diplomatic sources said they doubted that Leopold figured in any English romance although his brother, Prince Charles, might.

Charles, two years younger than the 36-year-old widower king, suddenly arrived in England yesterday. In 1932 he was reported engaged to Lady Anne, granddaughter of the Duke of Portland, at whose Nottinghamshire estate near Worksop Leopold and his mother, Queen Elizabeth, are visiting.

Poland Talks Finished, Delbos Off for Shrine

Warsaw, Dec. 6 (A.P.).—French Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos left Warsaw tonight after three days of talks that were considered to have cleared the way for a closer Franco-Polish alliance.

Foreign Minister Joseph Beck accompanied Delbos to Krakow where tomorrow he will visit the shrine of Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, Paland's national hero, after which he will depart for Bucharest, next stop on his tour of France's western and central European allies.

Franco's Victory Held Assured By Open Aid of Italy, Germany

Observer in Spain Says Last Six Months Have Completely Changed Picture; Nation's Raw Materials in Rebel Hands.

(Edward J. Neil has just come out of Spain after six months with the insurgent armies. In the following dispatch he tells how open German and Italian aid during that half year has convinced the insurgents they will win.—Editor's note.)

By Edward J. Neil.

An Associated Press Correspondent.

London, Dec. 6.—The course of the last six months of the Spanish civil war has convinced the insurgents their victory over the republican government is but a matter of time.

Germany and Italy have supplied open aid; most of Spain's raw materials have fallen into insurgent hands; Generalissimo Francisco Franco has in place a quarter of a million men for the northeastern drive he hopes will end the war.

Question Is Only "How Long."

Six months ago the questions were: Which side will win? Is the civil war the start of a world conflict?

Today insurgents ask only: How much longer will it take Franco and his seasoned army of 750,000 to complete the insurgent conquest?

Half a year ago the issue still hung in the balance. The insurgents were staggered by the overwhelming defeat of the Italian legions at Guadalajara in March just as Madrid seemed at Franco's mercy; the government seemed impregnable in the northern provinces of Vizcaya, Santander and Asturias with their treasures of coal, iron, copper and tin—raw materials of war.

Aid No Mystery.

Germany and Italy had not openly joined the insurgent movement, the bid of monarchists, army leaders, church parties, aristocrats and Fascist-minded falangists to overthrow a democratic government with radical leanings. International incidents threatened foreign intervention to restore the status quo ante.

Today the attitude of Britain and France toward Franco has softened, and Russian interest has been diverted by the advance of Japan in the Far East. All mystery about Italian and German aid for Franco has disappeared. Germany sent planes, aviators, technicians, guns and munitions. Italy sent even greater quantities of these and some 50,000 troops.

Franco's armies have swept the North and today control all the raw materials of Spain except the southern mercury mines. The generalissimo rules two-thirds of Spanish territory, including Mallorca and Spanish Morocco and more than 14,000,000 of the country's 23,000,000 population.

Six Armies Prepared.

Along the Aragon front, just below the French border, Franco has massed his armies. The drive generally is expected to strike down the broad valley of the Riber Ebro, then turn eastward to Barcelona, seat of the government, Spain's greatest seaport.

Six separate armies have been prepared to take part in the attack, which will coincide with lesser operations at Madrid and in the south they include:

A complete army of Italian regulars, 36,000 men of the Twenty-third of March, Littorio and Fiammi Neri Divisions, commanded by their own generals.

The Spanish regular army—known as the Tercio—that joined Franco at the start of the Civil War July 18, 1936.

Plans have been prepared with minute exactness during the fight for domination of the air, a prelude to the offensive.

Ultimatum Expires; Ignored.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Dec. 6 (A.P.). — Generalissimo Francisco Franco's ultimatum which insurgent sources said demanded unconditional surrender of the government under threat of a new offensive expired today without any apparent change in the civil war situation.

As far as could be learned at the frontier the government ignored the ultimatum giving it until December 5 to capitulate.

2 Japanese in Race To Kill 100 Chinese

Tokyo, Dec. 6 (A.P.).—The score was 89 to 78 today in the race between two Japanese sub-lieutenants to see which would be the first to kill 100 Chinese soldiers, the newspaper Nichi Nichi reported from Kuyung, China. The rivals had raised their scores within a week from 56 and 26, respectively.

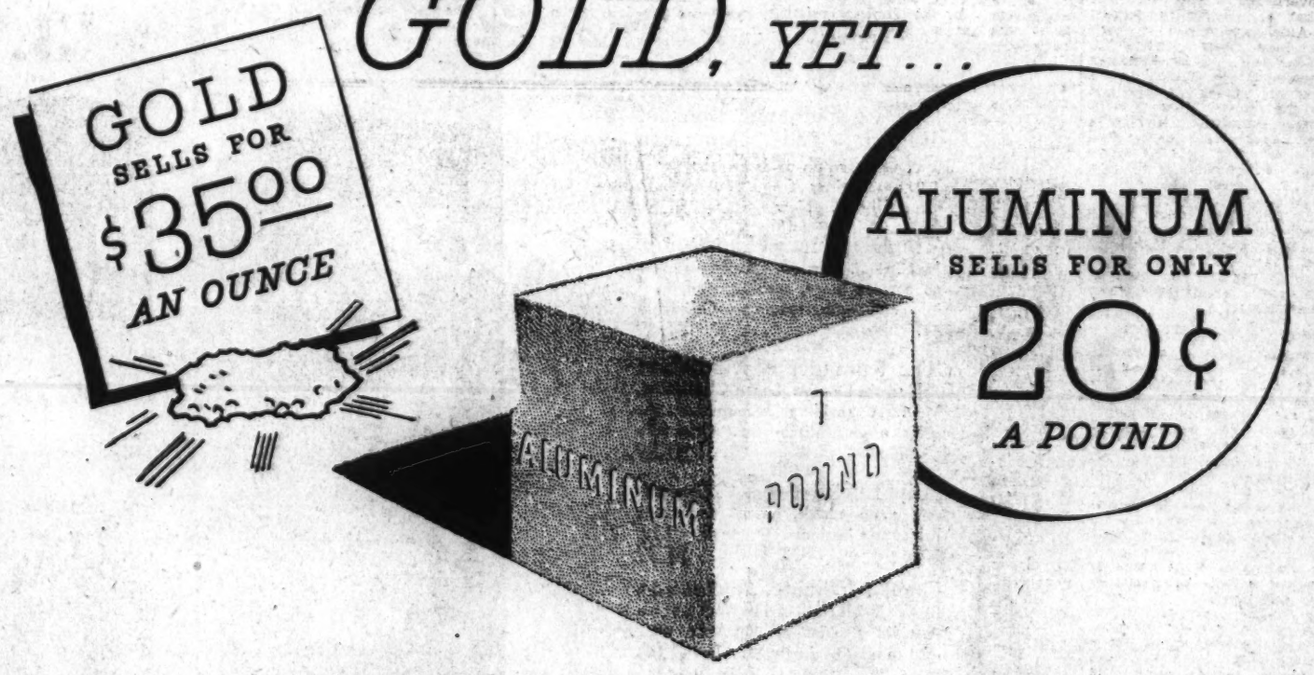
ALUMINUM

IS HARDER TO EXTRACT THAN GOLD, YET...



DOES YOUR NEIGHBOR KNOW THIS FACT?

Gold is gold when you find it, but there isn't much to find. That's why it's costly. A pan and some water in the hands of a solitary prospector is a complete gold factory.

Aluminum is just the opposite. There's a little in every clay bank. Even in richer ores it's so cleverly concealed in chemical form that it was only fifty years ago that Charles Hall discovered how to produce it cheaply.

It once was worth its weight in gold. Fifty years ago it sold for $8 a pound.

Today, we are selling bulk aluminum made by the Hall method for 20 cents a pound.

It has been done by teaming up science and money.

Science learned how to get from the ore a chemical called alumina; how to extract metal from alumina with electricity; and how to fabricate aluminum and to apply it to human needs. It took money to pay for refining plants, dams, powerhouses, and other equipment.

To make aluminum at all from the stubborn chemicals in Nature was an achievement. To produce it to sell for 20 cents a pound is a service to America.

U.S. Regards Vargas Regime As Non-Fascist

ican relationships," Welles asserted he was struck "with an apparent impatience—I might almost say intolerance—on the part of certain sections of our public here in the United States with regard to the way in which our American neighbors solve their purely domestic and internal problems."

He then referred to the change which took place last month in the governmental structure of Brazil and asserted that "almost before the bare announcement of what had taken place appeared in our news columns, editorials were being published throughout the United States undertaking to interpret the significance of the event and asserting that the change which had been brought about implied a complete departure from the democratic traditions of the Western Hemisphere and an assimilation of ideologies which have been recently developed in other portions of the world."

No Facts in Assumptions.

But, he went on, "when the true situation was revealed, it was made clear that the original assumptions on the part of a great portion of our press and the portentous declarations of certain of our statesmen were unfounded on fact." A little farther on he declared that American friendship with Brazil "has become traditional and will not only be maintained but will be enhanced throughout the years to come."

Welles also contended that the vehement recriminations regarding the Brazilian development in which a large portion of Americans indulged were "predicated upon false premises and even falser conclusions." He cited this episode as indicating the need "to refrain from minding your neighbor's business for him" as a salient part of the Administration's "good neighbor" policy.

He reminded his audience, without further reference to Brazil that Americans too often forget that the Latin-American republics spring from a different heritage and from a civilization distinct from, though "quite as admirable" as, the Anglo-Saxon civilization and that they "by consequence employ in the solution of their national problems methods which at times are distinct from those which we ourselves employ in striving toward objectives which may in turn be quite the same as theirs."

Democracy Is Instinct.

Significant also in pointing up the impression which Welles apparently wished to create were his words that "the love of individual liberty and of freedom is just as deeply ingrained in the national consciousness of our neighbors ae it is in our own," followed immediately by the declaration that "the principles of democracy are instinct in every nation of the Americas."

Having thus indicated he had no anxiety over the status of the Brazilian government, Welles went on to assert that "any attempt on the part of non-American powers to exert through force their political or material influence on the American Continent would be immediately a matter of the gravest concern not only to the United States but to every other American republic as well and appropriate action undoubtedly would at once be determined upon as the result of common consultation between them."

Thus, he again pointed up his remarks by saying in effect that if there were any reason to be concerned about foreign influence at work in Brazil he would not be talking as he was but that this government already would have taken appropriate action.

Democracy to Stay Unimpaired.

In saying this, he asserted that he did not wish to "underestimate the extent to which propaganda of a type alien to our Western civilization has been spread on our continent during the past years" but he contended that the democratic civilization of the Americas "will remain unimpaired by the fantasies which suffering peoples in other parts of the world have devised as panaceas for their own monetary ills and by the propaganda which emanates from them."

In his discussion of the necessity for tolerance among Americans in viewing developments in Latin-America, Welles undertook to defend against charges of "communism" those nations which "in a spirit of the truest democracy have undertaken to remedy underlying social and economic conditions."

He contended each nation has a right to order its internal affairs as it thinks best and that "the day has passed when a citizen of the United States, acquiring property in another American republic, can undertake to maintain that because of his citizenship, his person and his property are free from the jurisdiction of the laws and of the courts of the other American republic where he lives and that he is supported in such contention by his own government. In this part of his speech Welles apparently had Mexico in mind.

Welles shared the program of the first session of the George Washington University forum with Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of the university, Don Manuel de Freyre y Santander, Ambassador of Peru, Dr. Don Adrian Recinos, Minister of Guatemala and Dr. Leo S. Rowe, director-general of the Pan American Union.

They joined their voices with that of Welles in proclaiming the solidarity of the nations of the Western Hemisphere in the bonds of democracy and an ever-lasting peace based on good neighborliness and mutual respect.

Wheat Quotas Killed in House, But Boileau Farm Attack Fails

Frazier Assails Wallace Attitude That Bill Goes Too Far; Wisconsin Member's Effort to Remove Enacting Clause Arouses Jones.

Federation of Labor representative the A. F. of L. substitute bill, if offered from the floor, would jeopardize the legislation because it "would be subject to a point of order." Downtown, the United States Chamber of Commerce was urged by a special committee of members to oppose any and all forms of Federal wages-hours legislation.

The House also moved yesterday tentatively to exempt the three-bale cotton producer from marketing quotas. The Senate approved a provision for contracts with wheat and corn growers who want to participate in voluntary acreage allotments.

Senator Charles McNary, of Oregon, Republican leader declared similar contracts were not required for cotton, rice and tobacco growers, in spite of Secretary Wallace's insistence on uniform treatment for farmers. Corn and wheat contracts would operate only when 51 per cent of growers in referenda agreed to them.

A limit of 70 per cent on corn and wheat loans to non-co-operating producers was also approved by the Senate.

Although debating doldrums ever the farm bill continued in the Senate, Senator James P. Pope (Democrat), Idaho, said a survey showed enough votes to pass the bill despite general Senate criticism. Leaders in both Houses hope for passage by Wednesday.

Senator Frazier, aided by Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), New York, charged "political farmers" wrote the Senate bill, that hearings on the measure had been "engineered" by Senate agriculture sub-committees and that "at least 75 per cent of the witnesses" were Government-paid officials.

Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach (Democrat), Washington, replied to the assault of Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, on the bill last Friday. Schwellenbach said Borah's suggestion that the Government buy commodity surpluses for the needy instead of trying to slash production would cost $1,687,000,000 a year, as compared with the $500,000,000 estimated cost of the present bill.

Borah answered by saying that the cost of neither bill could be accurately estimated, and added: "I am not interested in balancing the budget at the expense of hungry people."

Senator George McGill (Democrat), Kansas, insisted the hearings had been conducted fairly while Senator George W. Norris (Independent), Nebraska, shouted angrily: "For God's sake, do you want the sub-committees to go to the farmers' houses and ask them to come to the meetings?"

At least 70 amendments and a substitute bill remained to be considered under the Senate's debate limitation before disposal of the bill this week.

The House turned down two amendments proposed by Representative Lex Green (Democrat), of Florida, which would have given his State a "better break" on tobacco provisions, but accepted another proposed by Representative August H. Andresen (Republican), of Minnesota, to limit administrative expenditures of the program to $25,000,000.

The Chamber of Commerce declaration against the wages-hours bill said:

"Wage rates and hours of work for adult employes of enterprises engaged in industry and commerce should continue to be adjusted through voluntary action of employes and employers, negotiating either individually or collectively, and with only such legislative restrictions as may be validly imposed by State Governments to protect the health and well-being of workers for whom such legislative protection may be necessary."

Housing Called Business Aid, Crime Obstacle

Senate Committee to Study Cut to 4¼% in Home Interest Rate.

By the Associated Press.

Housing offers the best opportunity to keep business going for the next four or five years as well as providing a deterrent to crime, a business leader and a Congressman told the Senate Banking Committee yesterday.

The Senate committee plunged into its second week of hearings on President Roosevelt's housing proposals as the House committee decided in executive session to throw its hearings open to all who wished to testify.

Chairman Wagner (Democrat), New York, said the banking committee would study a suggestion that the interest rate on homes costing $6,000 or less be cut to 4¼ per cent.

The President urged a reduction to 5½ per cent, 1 per cent less than the Federal Housing Administration now offers on insurable loans. With the view of cutting down monthly payments on a small house, the committee also will consider making the life of mortgages 30 instead of years, Wagner said. Experts told the committee last week this would bring new homes within reach of those who could pay from $20 to $30 a month.

Robert E. Wood, president of Sears-Roebuck Co., which recently built a group of houses for industrial workers at Kankakee, Ill., told the Senate group the President's proposals would provide the "framework for getting housing in the biggest market—the low-income group with pay of from $1,500 to $1,200 a year."

Representative Curley (Democrat), New York, said proper housing would be the first step in stamping out disease, insanity and crime in the slum areas of the larger cities.

"In the long pull," Wood declared, "this housing offers the best way to keep business going for the next four or five years."

In reply to questions from Senator Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, Wood said he thought laborers employed by large-scale contractors who build 100 or more houses a year might be induced to accept an annual wage instead of "the higher hourly pay they now receive for irregular periods of work."

Hull Cites Policy In Neutrality Act

By the Associated Press.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull yesterday in a letter told the House Foreign Affairs Committee application of the neutrality act must await a declaration by President Roosevelt that a state of war actually exists.

"The entering into force of the restrictive provisions of the neutrality act is left to and is dependent upon a decision of the President by a finding that there exists a state of war," the Secretary wrote.

"The policy of the Department of State in reference to this act is dependent upon that decision. The Department of State keeps constantly in mind the fact that the principal purpose of the act is to keep the United States out of war."

Helium Shipments To Nazis Allowed

By the Associated Press.

The State Department authorized an agent of the German Zeppelin Co. yesterday to export 17,900,000 cubic feet of non-inflammable helium gas.

The authorization was granted to the American Zeppelin Transport, Inc., of New York, which listed itself as agent for the German company. The gas is wanted by Germany for use in a new zeppelin, the LZ-130.

Treasury Reports Oversubscription

By the Associated Press.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announced last night new issues of Federal bonds and notes placed on sale yesterday were oversubscribed by one of the largest percentages in Treasury history.

Subscriptions for the $250,000,000 worth of 8-year 2½ per cent bonds were estimated at 15 times the amount available and offers for $200,000,000 worth of 5-year 1¾ per cent notes were about 11 times the supply. Because of this response, Morgenthau said no offers would be received after last night.

The new securities will be used, he said, to pay off $450,000,000 worth of short-term Treasury bills maturing this month.

Sen. Gibson Echoes G.O.P. Purge Plea

By the Associated Press.

Senator Gibson (Republican), of Vermont, commended yesterday the statement by Gov. George D. Aiken of Vermont calling for a "purge" of the Republican Party.

"I've been talking that way a long time," Gibson commented. "Something must be done."

Little Rock, Ark., Dec. 6 (AP).—Wallace Townsend, Republican national committeeman for Arkansas, today took issue with the view of Gov. Aiken that the National Committee needed to be "purged of the baneful influence of the Southern committeemen."

Marietta, Ga., Dec. 6 (AP).—Mrs. Bertha M. Field, Republican national committeewoman for Georgia, said today she was not "unduly disturbed" over the Vermont Governor's opinion "of Southern committeemen and committeewomen."

Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), of Alexandria, Va., lives only 8 miles away, however, and his total allowance will be $3.20.

The Hawaiian delegate, Samuel W. King, is also paid mileage for his trip of 3,032 miles by land to San Francisco and 2,408 miles over water, a total of 5,450 miles each way at 20 cents a mile, or $2,180. The Alaskan delegate, Anthony J. Dimond, receives a lump sum of $1,500, while the Puerto Rican Resident Commissioner, Santiago Iglesias, gets a $500 lump sum travel allowance.

Vice President John Nance Garner is provided for in the resolution. A check disclosed that Uvalde, Tex., reached through St. Louis, Mo., and San Antonio, Tex., is 2,018.8 miles from Washington, so that Garner, if he chooses not to make the 10-day trip there and back, will have a Christmas bonus of $807.52.

The House met in a rollicking mood, expecting this lightsome interlude before settling down to the graver work of the controversial farm bill. After the opening routine, Speaker Bankhead, having difficulty in quelling the noisy members, shouted:

"The House will be in order. Here is a matter in which some members may be interested."

The members hushed as Representative Edward T. Taylor (Democrat), of Colorado, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said dryly:

"This resolution speaks for itself." The whole House laughed. Taylor continued with an explanation that the money was already appropriated as mileage-pay for the next session and should merely be made available for the special session, as mileage-money for the regular session can always be appropriated. He recalled that all previous extra sessions except a war-time meeting had appropriated mileage-pay whether the members went home or not.

Then the Republicans burst forth, although not exactly in opposition to the mileage resolution. Their point was that the special session had accomplished nothing, although the country. Representative Robert L. Bacon, of New York, said, "is in a business recession which is rapidly becoming a major depression."

Representative John Taber, also Republican, of New York, took the floor first to shout: "This is the third day of the tenth month of the sixth year of the 'emergency' in this Administration.

"This Administration is the greatest creator of emergencies the world has ever known."

Bacon declared that "if the President insists on going to Florida, Congress must take the lead."

Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., of New York, third Republican to rise in "opposition," although he later voted for the mileage pay resolution, said when he was greeted with a roar of mocking laughter:

"I'm not against this resolution. I don't see how I could be, while the President is enjoying his mileage pay to Florida waters. I believe we should add a yacht to this resolution for the use of the House members."

Bacteria Count Per D. C. Spoon Is Cut to 6,000

Cafe Drive Began When 600,000 Were Found on One Implement.

Four bacteriologists, an entomologist, a former veterinarian, over 600 frightened restaurant proprietors and a bug-counter with a law degree have succeeded in reducing Washington's bacteria population considerably since last month.

It was four weeks ago that Dr. R. R. Ashworth, head of the District Health Department food inspection, discovered 600,000 bacteria on one restaurant spoon. He also learned to his horror that this was a pretty fair average. The antibug crusade which resulted from his discovery already has reduced that average to about 6,000.

"Restaurant hostesses now are paying more attention to the dishwashers and less attention to the cashier," Dr. Ashworth said yesterday. "We've uncovered so much through our bacteriologists that people will never go back to the naked eye as a test of cleanliness."

To Allow 500 on Spoon.

The principal spur the food inspectors have applied to the restaurants is a regulation denying 1938 licenses to those whose spoons and glasses bear more than 500 bacteria. "Actually, the regulation requires that the utensils be sterile," Dr. Ashworth admitted. "But I'm letting them get by with 500 germs. It's pretty hard to get anything surgically sterile."

The campaign makes Washington the first city in the country to employ bacteriologists as food inspectors. "I predict the time is coming when every city will do it," Dr. Ashworth declared. "It's the greatest step ever taken toward the elimination of saliva-born diseases."

His bug-hunters have found everything imaginable in the course of their small game expedition. Streptococci (sore throat germs), pneumococci (pneumonia bacteria) and worse have come to light when the findings are examined with a microscope.

The bug census already has attracted Nation-wide interest. The New York City health commissioner is sending two of his food inspectors here tomorrow to study the counting method used.

Lipstick, the inspectors have discovered, acts like a magnet to bacteria. They have found that no machine made will remove it from glasses and silverware and insist that these articles be washed by hand.

Old Toothbrush Is Cleaner.

"I read an article the other day in which the writer thanked God for lipstick," the head food inspector said. "He seemed to think that lipstick helps us discover at least 50 per cent of the dirty glasses and suggested that men be forced to wear it so that the record would be 100 per cent. But when we get through here, there'll be no lipstick stains at all."

Whenever he encounters an unbeliever, Dr. Ashworth asks if he would want to use a second-hand toothbrush. Even that is cleaner than most of the dishes the public eats from, he explains.

The inspectors take swabbings from ten glasses and ten pieces of silver in each restaurant, so as to insure an adequate cross section of conditions there. The swabs are deposited in sterile water and placed in an "incubator." When the bacteria have had time to develop, drops of the water are placed on slides and scrutinized beneath a microscope.

About 200 restaurants already have been inspected in this way. Nearly 700 proprietors have attended hearings at which Dr. Ashworth explained the campaign. Beer parlors also are interested because the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board has threatened to withhold beverage licenses from establishments which fail to pass the food inspectors' test.

The bacteriologists, all graduates of the University of Maryland, are Arthur R. Buddington, Jack Wolk, Louis Littman and Harold B. Robinson. Their salaries are provided by a Congressional appropriation which Representative Ross Collins, chairman of the District Committee, was instrumental in securing.

Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, yesterday congratulated Dr. Ashworth and his aides.

The department has warned restaurant owners against salesmen who offer them germ exterminators bearing the approval of the health authorities. "We haven't indorsed any chemical product to date," according to Dr. Ashworth. "In fact, we haven't found any chemical product which will do the work.

D. C. Health Official on 'Bug Hunt'

Arthur R. Buddington, District Health Department bacteriologist, embarks on a bacteria-hunting expedition in the kitchen of a local restaurant. The chances are that the swab with which he is wiping the tumbler will capture as many as 6,000 germs. The restaurant won't "pass" unless the number is 500 or less.

Winter Drive On Remodeling Houses Urged

Local Building Officials Plan to Stimulate Construction.

A remodeling campaign to stimulate building through the quiet winter months was suggested yesterday by Hector M. Aring, second vice president of the Washington Building Congress, at a luncheon meeting of that organization at the Lafayette Hotel.

Other suggestions of members to promote the general welfare of the construction industry were revision of the District building code; encouragement of craftsmanship through certificates and awards; apprenticeship training; fair trade practice, especially with regard to bidding, and co-operation with local building authorities.

Col. John W. Oehmann, District inspector of building, a guest at the meeting, recommended that the congress encourage proper preparation of plans in connection with application for building permits and compliance on the part of employes with plans as approved. He also offered licensing of builders as another suggestion and advised that action with regard to building code revision be considered by the congress as a group rather than as part of a joint committee.

A standard form of subcontract, and elimination of 24-hour auto parking as a means of creating work through garage construction, were other ideas submitted in the general discussion.

Touring National Parks Is Subject of Lecture

Slugger's Victim Near Death Here

William Herbert, 65-year-old storekeeper, was near death in Emergency Hospital last night of a fractured skull suffered when he was struck on the head with a hammer by a colored bandit.

Herbert was sitting in his grocery store at 724 F street southwest, shortly before noon when his assailant entered. Walking past Herbert, the bandit wheeled suddenly and struck the blow before Herbert had time to defend himself.

Mrs. Dora Herbert, wife of the victim, heard the thud and ran to the store. She told police she saw the man rifling her husband's pockets.

She said she screamed and that the culprit lunged at her with the hammer but failed to strike her. The intruder fled.

Herbert had about $360, of which the bandit took $200, Mrs. Herbert said.

Big Maine-Idaho Spud Eating Orgy To Be Wednesday

The State of Maine yesterday accepted Idaho's challenge to an eating contest to decide the potato supremacy of the world, but asked that the gastronomic battle be postponed until tomorrow so that a choice selection of Aroostook County spuds might be flown here for the fray.

A carload of Idaho potatoes arrived yesterday morning and was opened in the B. & O. freight yards by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, Senators Borah and Pope and Representatives White and Clark, of Idaho. A portion of this consignment was to have been used today for an eating contest.

But Idaho—the challenge letters passed between Representative Compton I. White, of that State, and Representative Ralph O. Brewster, of Maine—agreed to the delay. White said that in the interval the Idaho Dairymen's Association would fly five pounds of that State's best butter here to go with its potatoes.

The test will take place in the House Restaurant at 12:30 p. m. tomorrow with the Congressional delegates from Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii and Puerto Rico as judges.

Poison Victim Faces Arrest on Recovery

Police said last night Buddy Yates, 25, of 14 Girard street northwest, would be arrested when he leaves Gallinger Hospital, where he is recovering from poisoning.

The man was found lying on the sidewalk at North Capitol and L streets early yesterday morning. Det. Sergt. Herbert Wanamaker, seeing a police report of the incident, recognized Yates' name as that of a man for whom he had been searching for months in connection with a larceny case.

Adventists Warned Persecution Near

The Rev. M. N. Campbell, director of Seventh-Day Adventist Church activities in North America, last night warned members of that denomination that "persecution is soon coming upon the true followers of God everywhere." The Adventists here this week are holding their annual Week of Prayer in common with others of the denomination throughout the country.

The Rev. Mr. Campbell based his warning on prophecies in Revelations 14:9 to 12. He said the persecution, "which has already begun to fall upon God's faithful commandment-keeping people in some lands," will come because of the refusal of His followers to accept Baal's Sabbath in the place of Jehovah's Sabbath.

Millions of men were calling FOR THOSE MELLOW AMERICAN BLENDS like this

WHEN you read in the sports page that Man o' War was War Admiral's daddy, you couldn't escape the feeling that here's a colt it might be wise to lay a little bet on. Breeding counts! And just so with National's EAGLE!

You see, in the old days before the war, these great American blends were so amazingly popular . . . and so deservedly popular! . . . that when Repeal came, National Distillers started at once on a 1937 edition of them! But it took aged American whiskies to make those fine American blends, and although we owned many of the great American brands, we had to wait until the Summer of 1937, for some of the whiskies in this blend to reach maturity.

But when we tell you that here is one of the first of that fine, pre-war type of American blends in a generation . . . made the old American way . . . with aged American whiskey and velvet grain neutral spirits (every drop distilled in the U. S. A.) . . . by the very men who made so many of those great pre-war Blends . . . well, isn't that worth waiting for . . . and worth a little bet?

ORDER a drink of National's EAGLE at the bar, club or restaurant! Or take a bottle home from your liquor store and make the acquaintance of a great American blend with a milder but distinctive difference in taste that gives a whole new meaning to your drinks!

Nine Radio Rulings Upheld by Court

Denial by the Federal Communications Commission of five applications for radio facilities was upheld by the United States Court of Appeals yesterday. The stations involved were located in St. Louis and in the State of Utah.

Application of the Star-Times Publishing Co. for a permit to construct and operate a broadcasting station in St. Louis, which was granted and which had been attacked by two rivals, was declared to be within the jurisdiction of the FCC. The appeals of the rival companies were dismissed.

Three other cases were disposed of in a single opinion when the court ruled that the Great Western Broadcasting Association, Inc., applications for permits for three Far Western stations were properly denied by the commission. Stations in Logan, Provo, and Salt Lake City were being sought by the Great Western.

Prosecutor Gets Threat in Slaying

Minneapolis, Dec. 6 (AP).—County Attorney Ed J. Goff said today he had received a telephone threat demanding he "lay off" prosecution of three Chicago men, two of whom fought with Patrick J. Corcoran, Minneapolis labor leader, a few days before he was slain November 17.

Goff said the threat came as he was planning his appeal to the Hennepin County grand jury for indictments against Eddie and Al Fiorotto and Joe Bellini, labor organizers.

NLRB Powers Seen Threat to Press Freedom

obedience to the subpena of the board on the ground that the testimony or evidence required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty.'"

This use of the subpena clause in the act, it was believed, possibly would become the nub of an argument over infrigement of the freedom of press and speech guaranteed in the first amendment to the constitution forbiding congress to pass any act infringing upon those rights.

Workers Given Reprints.

The questions ranged far and wide, but the general intimation of the NLRB made specific in the trial examiner's report, was that the Stackpole Carbon Co., which was involved in labor trouble, had control of the newspaper and that the contributed editorial was a company contrivance.

According to the examiner's report, the newspaper made 1,000 reprints of the contributed editorial. These reprints, according to the examiner's report, were ordered by the carbon firm before the editorial appeared in the newspaper and were subsequently distributed to employes of the firm. The transcript shows the editor denied knowledge of the reprints at the time and said the order for them had not come to him or his department.

The case bears on the NLRB subpenaing of Hartly Barclay, editor of the magazine Mill & Factory, who wrote an article on the Weirton Steel Co.'s labor situation critical of the board. This article too was reprinted and widely distributed. Barclay defied the subpena, which was returnable yesterday, but O'Brien, who had no attorney of his own, submitted himself to the board.

Editor Denies Influence.

His cross examination brought out that O'Brien wrote the editorials and a good deal of the news for his paper. Asked how he was influenced in his editorial position he said "since I have been with the Daily Press Publishing Co., Mr. Macht, I have never been instructed what to write or what not to write. That is, there has been no persuasion used as far as the editorial columns of the Daily Press are concerned, insofar as I am concerned."

Harry S. Conrad, vice president of the carbon firm and one of five director's of the newspaper, was put on the stand by the N. L. R. B. in a move to show the close connection between newspaper and the Stackpole Co. Under questions, he said the directors' meeting determined how the publishing company's business was to be run but he said editorial policy positions to be taken by the paper had never been discussed at a directors' meeting.

Claude A. Armstrong, Conrad's attorney, showed the other four directors of the publishing company are not officers or directors of the Stackpole Co. He brought out that W. G. Bauer, president of the St. Marys Building & Loan Co., was president and general manager of the newspaper and the man to whom the editor would be directly responsible.

Editor on Defense.

A later question by the Board's attorney was:

"I want you to tell me frankly your other reasons for writing these editorials that you have described."

"In general I am opposed to the C. I. O. That is the only reason."

The Board's attorney then asked:

"You want as a newspaper man pretty much freedom to write what you think?"

"That is the goal of most all of us," O'Brien replied.

"And with that right to write as you please, do you feel any obligation to express the claim at least of anybody else in the community or at least to set forth the general claims of the parties of the community?"

"I think that is a matter that is exclusively up to the editorial end of the newspaper. You can write the views for them or you can not write them. That depends entirely on your own personal opinion," O'Brien explained.

Windsor 'Takes It,' Laughs With Press Over Married Life

Paris, Dec. 6 (U.P.).—The Duke of Windsor showed tonight he could "take it" when he laughed heartily at a skit titled "That Happily Married Man," which was the piece de resistance of raillery at the Anglo-American Press Association's annual dinner.

The skit, patterned on those which feature Washington Gridiron dinners, was built around the duke's statement recently, "I am a very happily married man."

Starhemberg Asks Child Be Legalized

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Dec. 6.—Admitting parenthood of his comely bride's 3-year-old son, Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg today opened proceedings to make the boy his legal heir.

He petitioned the Swiss birth registry office to reregister the child, born at Lucerne, in the name of Von Starhemberg.

Ludwig Draxler, former Austrian minister of finance, representing the wealthy and politically prominent prince, said he expected no serious complications and that under Austrian law the child became legitimate at the moment of marriage.

The boy's name was registered as Heinrich Rudiger Gregor, Draxler said, and was born to the Viennese actress, Nora Gregor, October 4, 1934. She became Princess von Starhemberg last Thursday shortly after the prince's first marriage was annulled.

Whereabouts of the youngster was kept secret because of threats said to have been made by political enemies to kidnap him should his father re-enter Austrian politics. A friend of the prince admitted detectives were guarding the boy.

Police Hold Abandoned Bandit Autos

Slaying, Arrest Of Yegg to Solve Safecrackings

Dope-Crazed Suspect Held in $100,000 Crime Series in D. C.

More than a score of safe burglaries which have netted gangsters nearly $100,000 in the last six months will be cleared by the slaying of Carlton G. (Cotty) Williams, 30, and the arrest of his dope-crazed pal—a colored gunman—police declared last night.

The Post learned of the arrest of the colored yegg who was seized at his home by Detective Sergt. Joseph Shimon shortly after the vicious gun battle in the 3800 block of Suitland road southeast Sunday night.

Shimon, who gained intimate knowledge of the gang's habits in the last month, went to the colored man's home after he escaped the gun fire of police. The man surrendered without a struggle and parked outside his house was the bullet-riddled escape car containing safe cracking paraphernalia.

The suspect was placed in an outlying precinct and held under an assumed name. He has a long criminal record, police said.

Meanwhile, two other men were arrested early yesterday as detectives canvassed beer gardens and underworld hangouts for Williams' two other associates.

Capt. Ira E. Keck, assistant detective chief, said the men were taken into custory "because we didn't like the answers they gave us."

Keck announced that the identity of the two men who escaped is known and that both men are at liberty under high bonds after having been indicted many months ago—one for assault on a wftness and the other for safecracking.

Meanwhile, six detectives, including Capt. Keck and Lieut. Clement P. Cox, were technically under arrest until after an inquest in the death of Williams.

An autopsy at the District Morgue showed that Williams' body was riddled with shotgun pellets and bullets.

Williams has been out on $10,000 bond since April in connection with a $9,000 holdup in Philadelphia. He has been shadowed for six months by Shimon, who tapped telephone lines and listened to conversations from open windows.

The gang originally planned to crack the safe of the Palace Laundry Co., police indicated, but was frightened off.

Four white men, said by police to be responsible for burglaries costing District residents $50,000 in jewelry and other valuables, were in custody yesterday after a three-day series of arrests. None had been charged late last night.

Police said one of the suspects had been identified in two holdups and added that among the prisoners was a man closely resembling descriptions of Washington's "lone" liquor store bandit.

Hundreds With Fungi Treated For Syphilis, Doctor Asserts

Many Apparent Cases of Social Disease or Tuberculosis Could Be Alleviated for Fifty Cents, Virginia Scientist Says.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Dec. 6.—Hundreds of people who apparently are suffering from syphilis and tuberculosis could be adequately treated with 50 cents worth of drugs, a Medical College of Virginia scientist said today, because they are actually only harboring fungous growths.

Dr. Frederick W. Shaw, Professor of medicine who has spent 25 years in studying such growths, declared skin outbreaks resembling syphilis, chancres and cloudiness of the lungs are frequently only a species of fungus at work. These "great imitators," if unrecognized, result in a long series of treatments which are ineffective, he added. They may even be mistaken for leprosy.

In an interview preceding the celebration Tuesday of the 100th anniversary of the medical college Dr. Shaw pointed out accurate recognition of these fungous growths and their correct treatment constitutes one of the big steps forward to be made by medicine.

Fungi were studied with the microscope long before bacteria came under medical scrutiny, he added, but have been forced into the background by the necessity of conquering the germ diseases. Now, however, more attention must be focussed on the fungous diseases which, even if they do not resemble syphilis and tuberculosis, cause disfiguring damage to the skin.

"Almost any physician with the proper training in recognizing these growths can, with the aid of a microscope, make an accurate diagnosis and apply treatment which is quick and effective in most cases, Dr. Shaw declared.

Sale of Auto Tags Here 6,000 Behind Figure Year Ago

"Come and get 'em" was the appeal of Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer yesterday, announcing that 104,000 District motorists have yet to receive their 1938 automobile license plates.

To date, he said, tag distribution is 6,000 behind the same time last year. A total of 36,000 sets of plates has been issued so far and less than a month remains in which to complete distribution.

"We can fill all orders on schedule," Van Duzer said, "if car owners will only bring or send in their tag applications. It looks, however, like we will have a last-minute rush even greater than in past years."

In addition to routine tag assignments, said the Traffic Director, his department is faced with 10,000 applications for "special" or unusual license numbers. It is impossible, he added, to fill all these orders.

Hot Shoppe Girl Wins Waitress Title

The honor of national restaurant queen of America was bestowed upon Mildred Montague, waitress employed at the Hot Shoppe, last night at a joint meeting of the Washington and National Restaurant Associations in the Mayflower Hotel.

Judged on the basis of personality, beauty, carriage, health and appearance, Miss Montague was chosen by the judges as typifying the association's slogan, "Good Food Is Good Health."

Two ladies in waiting selected by judges were Lee Ferguson, of the Mayflower Hotel restaurant, and Virginia Frye, of the Blue and Gray Cafeteria.

State Bank Heads Ask To Be FDIC Advisers

side Fried's mother's home, dropping Fried, who was to return home later.

The younger Mrs. Fried finally notified the police Fried was missing. His car was found two hours later outside a roadhouse on the edge of this city.

The New York Post said Fried was under subpena to testify in an investigation by special rackets prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey. Dewey himself said Fried "has never been a witness before the grand jury, a courtroom witness, or in my office in any case before me, either pending or disposed of." Dewey, however, did not say Fried was not under subpena.

Figured in Inquiry.

Fried is a son of the late Joseph Fried, who was head of the Empire Sand & Gravel Co. and of Joseph Fried & Son, Bronx cinder company.

The Post said the missing man's company, which has offices in Fifth avenue, figured in the Hofstadter legislative committee's inquiry into various New York City government affairs under Mayor James J. Walker in 1931. At that time, the Post said, Generoso Pope was questioned about charges that his firm dominated the sand, gravel and cinder business in the city and was suppressing competition.

Westchester County officials went to the Fried home yesterday afternoon and discussed Fried's disappearance. One report was that Fried's five brothers had established contact with the supposed abductors and were trying to have the ransom reduced.

Henry Fried, brother of the missing man, said he believed his brother vanished of his own free will.

"I think it's just a question of a little family trouble, and that's all," he said.

Mrs. Daniels said:

"I don't know where they got the idea that Arthur has $100,000. It's preposterous. I believe it's nothing but a drink too many, and he's probably sleeping it off somewhere."

Daniels said Fried "was on a little spree" Saturday night, and added, "I am certain he is still on it and will be back tonight or tomorrow."

Clews Lacking in Troy Case.

Troy, N. Y., Dec. 6 (A.P.).—State police and local officials continued a search today for John R. Nyhoff, 23, son of a prominent Troy real estate man, who vanished mysteriously last Thursday.

"It is my belief John has met with foul play," John J. Nyhoff, his father and one-time candidate for Congress, declared. "I have a grave fear something has happened to him."

Young Nyhoff was last seen Thursday after he had gone to a hotel barbershop for a haircut. He married a daughter of the late State Supreme Court Justice James V. Coffey two years ago. He has a daughter, Noreen, who is a year and a half old.

Capt. John J. Lynch, head of the Troy Detective Bureau, said he was without clews.

Mrs. William R. Schack Files Reno Divorce Suit

Suit for divorce was filed in Reno yesterday by Mrs. Marcia Richard Schack against William Robert Schack, of 5716 Third street northwest, the Associated Press reported. Mrs. Schack charged cruelty.

The couple was married July 27, 1919, in Jersey City, N. J., the complaint showed.

Big Richmond Numbers Game Bared by U. S.

James K. Eagle Describes Racket in Resisting Tax Assessment.

By the Associated Press.

The story of how two partners operated a "numbers business" in Richmond, over a long period of years went into the record of the board of tax appeals yesterday.

The Internal Revenue Bureau had assessed James K. Eagle and W. H. Sampson, of Richmond, income tax deficiencies totaling approximately $223,000 from 1932 through 1935. Both petitioned for a review by the board.

Attorneys contended for Eagle and Sampson that the only possible deficiencies which could exist would accrue from "overestimated living expenses."

Eagle testified late yesterday his returns for the years in question were computed with the aid of Internal Revenue Bureau employes. In 1931, he said, the Government investigated his income for the prior 10 years.

Bureau attorneys attempted to show Eagle and Sampson bought thousands of "K-Books," for sale in the game they operated, and the books were not accounted for in income tax returns.

Leith S. Bremner, attorney for Eagle, objected, asserting many of the books were destroyed in raids, hidden to avoid arrests or were lost.

Eagle explained how the business operated to John A. Tyson, a board member. He said he financed Sampson when they first became associated. In the early days of his business, he said, daily gross receipts "wouldn't be more than $8."

The business, he said, consisted of selling "bets" on two combinations a day. Bets were as low as a cent each. The winning numbers were those computed from racing mutuel totals according to a previously announced formula.

Eagle testified his concern paid "odds of 600 to one" at one time, reducing them to 500 to one in 1935.

When first approached by Bureau officials in 1931, Eagle said, he "told them I had filed no returns because I was operating an illegitimate business, unlawful in the State of Virginia." He insisted he offered agents all the information necessary

Another Silver Edict Is Hinted By Morgenthau

Treasury Head Indicates Roosevelt Will Continue 'Bonus Buying.'

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau yesterday indicated that before the end of the year President Roosevelt would issue a proclamation extending the period in which the Treasury will buy newly-mined domestic silver at a premium above market quotations. He did not indicate, however, whether the present price of 77.57 cents an ounce would be continued after December 31, when the proclamation now authorizing such purchases expires.

Morgenthau's hint that the President would continue the newly-mined silver purchasing policy came after price of the white metal broke 2 cents an ounce at London, dropping to the American equivalent of 41 cents. Nervous selling orders from India and an absence of buying orders was attributed by London silver dealers to reports that the international silver agreement concluded in 1933 would be permitted to lapse at the end of this month. The Roosevelt proclamation was issued pursuant to this agreement.

Morgenthau also indicated the Treasury under its general silver purchase policy had bought some white metal yesterday to stabilize the price, but he declined to indicate how much. He further explained that when the Treasury's offering price for silver in the New York market is changed it would be announced by him.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, yesterday in the Senate criticized the New Deal bonus for newly mined silver. It was defended by Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, who said that the "bonus" in 3½ years had totaled only $44,000,000, or about $12,000,000 annually. He added that if the Treasury premium were withdrawn it would close the silver mines and throw 400,000 men on relief. Senator Vandenberg observed that the Treasury policy was pretty expensive relief.

Beware The Cough From a common cold That Hangs On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your common cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Creomulsion not only contains the soothing elements common to many cough remedies, such as Syrup of White Pine Compound with Tar, and fluid extract of Licorice Root, but it also has fluid extract of Ipecac for its powerful phlegm loosening effect, fluid extract of Cascara for its mild laxative effect, and, most important of all, Beechwood Creosote, perfectly blended with all of these so that it will reach the source of the trouble from the inside. Creomulsion can be taken frequently and continuously by both adults and children with remarkable results.

Thousands of people, who really know their drugs, use Creomulsion in their own families, realizing that this excellent preparation aids nature to soothe the inflamed mucous membranes, to heal the irritated tissues, and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm. Druggists also know the effectiveness of Beechwood Creosote and they rank Creomulsion "tops" for coughs because you get a real dose of Creosote in Creomulsion, emulsified so that it is palatable, digestible, and active in going to the very seat of the trouble.

Creomulsion is generally found satisfactory in the treatment of coughs, chest colds and bronchial irritation, especially those stubborn ones that start as just a common cold and hang on for dreadful days and nights thereafter. Even if other remedies have failed, your druggist is authorized to refund every cent of your money if you are not satisfied with the relief obtained from the very first bottle of Creomulsion. Don't worry through another sleepless night—use Creomulsion.

Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product, and the relief that you want. (Adv.)

Norman Prince Tomb, Statue Dedicated Here

Pershing Lauds Idealism of Lafayette Escadrille's U. S. Founder.

"One who chivalrously, heroically, lovingly gave his life for a great cause" was honored yesterday in Washington Cathedral, when the Norman Prince tomb and monument were dedicated. St. John's Chapel was overflowing.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, welcomed "to the aisles of this sacred place this memorial" and announced that the chapel has been set aside as the Army and Navy Chapel.

"It is a significant circumstance," he said, "that the first notable monument and memorial to be placed here is in honor of an American youth who made the supreme sacrifice not under his own colors but under the tricolor of France."

The statue, executed by the Polish sculptor, Paul Landowski, is a symbolic study of a smiling young aviator advancing, rifle in hand, to make the supreme sacrifice. The figure always will be a challenge to the youth of America, Bishop Freeman said.

"Service Constitutes Genius."

"It shows what constitutes real genius, what makes it worth while to live—service," he concluded.

Gen. John J. Pershing spoke briefly, lauding the "idealism, courage and confidence" of Prince, founder of the Lafayette Escadrille, which furnished the American Air Corps with some of its best aviators after the United States entered the World War.

Speaking for the French army, Maj. Gen. Adelbert de Chambrun also praised the hero.

Gen. de Chambrun outlined Prince's career from his enlistment in the French army in 1915. The late Myron Herrick, then Ambassador to France, expressed official disapproval of the aviator's plan to organize his fellow American volunteers into a flying unit, but added: "If I were in your place, young man, I know what I would do." The squadron was formed and six months later Prince was killed.

Famous aces who transferred from the squadron to the Air Corps after America's entrance into the war included Maj. Raoul Lufberry, who also was killed; "Tommy" Hitchcock and James Norman Hall. Shifan Rockwell, another of the squadron's heroes, was shot down about the same time as Prince.

Brother Represents Family.

Each of the speakers placed wreaths on the tomb. Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield of Boston also laid a wreath. Several members of the Massachusetts Congressional delegation were present. Other guests included Mrs. George Barnett, Miss Mabel T. Boardman, Capt. and Mrs. Dudley N. Carpenter, Capt. and Mrs. John H. Gibbons, Mrs. Frederic A. Keep, Mrs. George Shiras 3d, Charles Wetmore and W. N. Burden, of New York, and Miss Juliana Wood.

In the color guard were members of the Lieut. Norman Prince Post, American Legion, and of the Lieut. Norman Prince Post, V. F. W., of Boston. Past National Commander James Van Zandt of the Veterans of Foreign Wars also was present. Music was provided by the Cathedral Choir.

Dr. Lavrischev, Alaska U., Dies On Leave Here

Juneau Faculty Member Is Pneumonia Victim; Born in Russia.

Funeral services for Dr. Tikhon Lavrischev, 41, of the University of Alaska faculty, who died Sunday of pneumonia at Sibley Hospital, will be held at 2 p. m. today at Hysong's funeral chapel, with burial in Cedar Hill Cemetery. The chapel services will be conducted by the Russian Veterans' Post of World War veterans, while Masonic rites will be conducted at the cemetery.

Dr. Lavrischev, who lived at 6142 Thirty-first place, Chevy Chase, Md., was on a two-year leave of absence from the university at Juneau. He was compiling data, as a member of the Rockefeller Foundation staff, for a history of Alaska.

Born in Samara, Russia, Dr. Lavrischev was graduated from the Teachers College there and served as a Russian army officer in the World War. He came to the United States in 1922 and was ordained as a priest by the Russian Orthodox Church of Alaska in San Francisco. After educational missionary work in Alaska Dr. Lavrischev returned to California and was graduated with the degree of doctor of philosophy in education.

Returning to Alaska, Dr. Lavrischev was first principal of a public school and then a research professor at the university. The American International Academy recently decorated him with the Star and Cross of Science for contributions to educational work.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Mary Eloise Lavrischev, two sons, John, 5, and David, 1, survive.

Rites Set Today For Asylum Aide, Mrs. Schumacher

Funeral services for Mrs. Antoinette C. Schumacher, 86, former matron of the German Orphan Asylum, in Washington, will be held today at 2 p. m. from the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Mrs. Schumacher died Sunday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. T. Wells Brown, 6903 Sligo Mill road, Takoma Park, Md.

Born in New York City, Mrs. Schumacher resided in Washington and Takoma Park most of her life. Active in the affairs of the Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, she was honored as the oldest mother at the annual mothers' and daughters' banquest for the last two years.

Besides Mrs. Brown, she is survived by three other daughters, Mrs. Emil Fischer, of Washington; Mrs. Henry Skinner, of Four Corners, Md.; Mrs. H. Siles Brown, of Takoma Park. Also surviving are 19 grandchildren and 22 great-grandchildren. A grandson, Sergt. Ralph Brown, of the Prince Georges County police force, is in charge of the Hyattsville (Md.) substation.

'Flying Caravan' To Return Friday

The "flying caravan" of five women from the Peoples Mandate Committee, who left Washington October 29, and Hyde Park, N. Y., the next day, after being received by president Roosevelt, for a good-will flight to Latin American capitals, will arrive in Washington Friday after a 17,000-mile air tour, it was announced yesterday.

The purpose of the fliers was to help obtain ratification of the peace treaties drafted in Buenos Aires, Argentina, at the Pan-American conference there last December. Those who made the flight are Mrs. Burton W. Musser, of Salt Lake City; Mrs. Thomas Burke (Ana del Pulgar de Burke), of Washington, a Chilean by birth but an American citizen; Mrs. Enoch Wesley Frost, of Little Rock, Ark.; Mrs. Rebecca Hourwich Reyher, of New York City, and Mrs. Gaeta Wold Boyer, of Miami.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull will be principal speaker at a luncheon at the Hotel Carlton Saturday for members of the caravan.

Contest to Depict Capital Contrasts

The Washington Housing Association yesterday announced details of an invitation to amateur photographers to submit pictures portraying the two faces of Washington—its acres of marble and its slums.

Photographs will be received at the association office in the Barr Building, December 13 to 31. Most telling of these snapshots will be exhibited January 10-31 at the Central Public Library, the Georgetown, Mount Pleasant and Northeast branches and the Southwest Neighborhood House. Ballots cast by people attending the exhibitions will determine award of cash prizes.

Aim of the contest, according to Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman, executive secretary of the association, is to acquaint the District with housing conditions within its borders.

NEURITIS?

Neuritis is a warning of excess uric acid. That's why your doctor may have told you to avoid caffeine, for this drug in ordinary coffee is a producer of uric acid.

But you can still enjoy all the coffee you want. Just change to a blend that is 97% caffeine-free but 100% flavor-full. Kaffee-Hag Coffee is real coffee, all coffee, fine coffee—hearty and satisfying. Roasted by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

Even before he is born, Baby needs Vitamin D. All through infancy, childhood and adolescence, this valuable vitamin helps him grow strong, healthy bones and sound teeth.

Vitamin D Milk is pure, fresh, pasteurized milk, which has been enriched with Vitamin D. The addition of this beneficial vitamin enables the natural calcium and phosphorus of the milk to work more effectively in building and maintaining healthy bones and teeth.

For this reason doctors and dentists recommend Vitamin D for babies and growing children—and it is especially valuable for the expectant or nursing mother.

Every quart of Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Vitamin D Milk contains 400 U. S. P. Units of precious Vitamin D—yet it costs you only one cent a quart more than our regular milk. Telephone DEcatur 1011, order from your Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase milkman, or ask at your favorite store. Start tomorrow. We Thank You.

From the Washington Star of December 6.

The Star offers congratulations and best wishes on this sixtieth birthday anniversary to its neighbor and journalistic contemporary, The Washington Post. Any newspaper that has survived 60 years in Washington, known at one time as a "newspaper graveyard" because of the many and repeated interments of hopefully born journals, has achieved worthy distinction. The Post has not merely survived. Threescore years find it flourishing, in good health and looking forward to many more years of helpful service to the community and to the Nation. Many happy returns!

Washington's Health Survey.

There is reason for double satisfaction over the city-wide survey to be conducted by the United States Public Health Service. If the distressing health conditions here have been exaggerated in any respect, facts brought to light will serve to reassure the public. And where inexcusable neglect is resulting in needless loss of life, the report of the P. H. S. will constitute the strongest possible argument for remedial action.

Public health in Washington has failed to keep pace with developments in many other cities largely because Congress has not taken seriously the local community's appeals for more adequate appropriations. There seems to have been a belief among some Congressmen that the need for a more vigorous fight against contagion here has been exaggerated. It is especially fortunate, therefore, that the current survey is being conducted by a group of experts whose ability, integrity and impartiality are not open to question.

The District Commissioners were well advised in asking for a general survey. During a period of agitation for urgent improvements there is always danger of building up a distorted view of the community health problem as a whole. By extending the inquiry to venereal disease, infant and child health, sanitary engineering, health education, etc., the Public Health Service should be able to present a thorough and well-rounded picture of Washington's needs.

With that factual background, the community will be in a position to push its demands for adequate health service under the most favorable conditions.

The Doughboy Still Kingpin.

In modern times war in a great many of its outward aspects has undergone striking and revolutionary changes.

The mercenaries of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries gave way to the conscripts of the French Revolutionary era and subsequent decades. War instead of being, as it had been for a long time, primarily a duel between professional armies became an armed struggle involving not only a nation's manpower but all its economic and financial resources as well. And with the development of the airplane as an offensive weapon war became in a very real sense totalitarian. That is to say the distinction between battle front and behind the lines disappeared as did the distinction between combatant and noncombatant.

In one extremely important particular, however, the nature of war has not changed at all. Now, as heretofore, the backbone of every army remains the infantry, and in the last analysis wars are still won or lost by foot soldiers regardless of the aid they may receive from the new instruments of warfare such as tanks, bombing planes, etc.

This is the lesson which war offices all over the world, including our own, have learned from the fighting in China and Spain. Those contests have been, in professional eyes, excellent proving grounds of new war-making devices and novel tactics.

The evidence now available, says Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff, in his report to the Secretary of War, "demonstrates again that neither of these arms (tanks and planes) can bring about a decision in land operation. They are auxiliaries, valuable auxiliaries, to the infantry, whether the support given be of a tactical or a strategical nature. But for the decision we must still look to the man on foot. The new arms can aid him; they can not replace him."

In other words the decision in a war now, as in the past, rests with the commander who "gets there fustest with the mostest men." Or, as the old Army song has it:

"The cavalry, artillery and the bloomin' engineers
They couldn't lick the infantry in a hundred thousand years!"

Change Of Strategy In Order.

After two weeks of debate on the farm bill it is obvious that Congress is making little progress. That measure is so complicated that discussion seems only to plunge it deeper into confusion. Several farm groups are worried over the prospect that it may become law in its present form. Secretary Wallace has openly criticized the bill on the ground that it is unnecessarily drastic.

Under these circumstances, the drive for early enactment of the farm bill is sustained chiefly by the desire of Congressional leaders to make a good showing during the extra session, in line with the President's wishes. Their reluctance to let the session end with a negative record can be readily appreciated. But it would be much better for Congress to adjourn without enacting a single major bill than to rush headlong into a bewildering policy designed to establish a Federal dictatorship over agriculture.

Certainly the bill is not now in any condition for enactment. Even if the Administration persists in its attempt to regulate farming, in the face of major constitutional and economic obstacles, a considerable period will be required to put the bill into satisfactory form. That patent fact suggests recommittal of both the Senate and House bills for further study by the Agriculture Committees.

It should not be assumed that this course would brand the extra session with futility. Even before Congress assembled it was apparent that the program outlined in the President's call did not cover the most important problems demanding legislative action. Since that time the President has taken a realistic view by sending his housing message to Congress and announcing that he would like to see burdensome taxes revised as soon as Congress is ready to act.

Congress might well have turned to these important issues without becoming involved in a snarl over the farm bill. Now that all hope of enacting a reasonable farm-aid program at the extra session seems to have passed there is no longer any point in continuing the debate on that subject to the exclusion of plans to check the business recession.

In some respects the housing bill is also complicated. But it represents merely an extension of the policy already being pursued with some degree of success through the Federal Housing Administration. Unlike the proposals to raise farm income and fix minimum wages in industry, it has not aroused vigorous controversy. After careful study by committees in both houses, it could be enacted with little difficulty. Relief of industry from arbitrary taxes could also be accomplished without any protracted delay if Congress were willing to pass an emergency bill largely confined to changes in rates.

There is no lack of constructive work for Congress to do. But whether or not that body is ready to face the problems of the latest recession, it should abandon attempts to legislate for the benefit of farmers and working men until clear-cut, rational policies within the powers of the Federal Government have been worked out.

Tortugas To Tortures.

These are not times to wheedle fractious little boys into better behavior by clucking optimistically about their prospects of becoming President of the United States. Nobody envies Mr. Roosevelt in the ordeal through which he is now passing. For, as the reporters left on shore during his fishing trip have related with perhaps pardonable verbosity, the President is still suffering from the effects of a toothache.

So, back he has come from the Dry Tortugas to what will doubtless be somewhat moist tortures. Instead of a comfortable open-necked shirt, he must don a rubberized bib; instead of the scream of a running reel, the baleful buzz of a dental drill will be his respite from the increasing reports of restlessness on Capitol Hill.

The sympathies of dentist-dodging millions will go out to him in this his hour of appointment—an appointment which, incidentally, he can not call up and cancel merely because he happens to be President. And it makes little difference that the dentist goes to him, Mahomet-like, instead of having him go to the dentist.

The President can count on one special dispensation, however. It is reasonably certain that, when his mouth has been stuffed beyond all hope of speech with wadding, bits, and braces, Commander Yando, of the Navy Dental Corps, is not going to lean over benignly and ask, "What do you think of the political situation these days?"

The Parole System.

In an address before a convention of life insurance executives, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, recently made it clear that he heartily approves of the parole system in principle. "There is no fault whatever to find," he said, "with any parole system that honestly releases a first offender after he has served a definite period of time, and then closely supervises his activities in a proper way after his release, so that he may remake himself into a respectable citizen."

In other words, it is not the system itself but its frequent maladministration that is the target of Mr. Hoover's assaults.

It is important to keep this distinction in mind for it would be most unfortunate for society at large as well as for those directly affected if the public were to turn against the parole system. Without paroles for good behavior, our prisons would become even more intolerably congested. Moreover, too severe limitation of paroles would make it increasingly difficult to maintain discipline inside of prison walls.

Instead of restrictions upon the present system it really should be extended to cover all newly released convicts, as urged by the director of the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Every man just out of prison is in need of friendly advice and guidance, not simply to make sure that he keeps out of mischief but to provide him with an incentive for going straight.

Mr. Hoover rightly condemns the release of hardened criminals incapable of being rehabilitated as well as the lack of essential supervision over those who can be reclaimed. He is, however, inclined to emphasize the mistakes of parole officials instead of stressing the handicaps under which conscientious officials labor because of inadequate funds for hiring competent supervising staffs.

The shocking instances of abuse of parole resulting from maladministration do not discredit the principle upon which the parole system rests, nor do they prove that parole officials are sentimental fools and bunglers, as some critics appear to think.

The faults of our parole system are really a reflection upon the political intelligence of the people of this country who accept a system in principle and then withhold from their agents the men and money needed to make that system work.

Examining The Foundations.

The first result of Gov. Aiken's open letter to the Republican National Committee may well be some intensification of that "nearly complete state of demoralization" in which he finds the onetime G. O. P. The strictures passed by the Governor of Vermont are so searching, his analysis of party shortcomings so direct and unqualified, that a hostile reaction from those criticized is to be expected.

But Gov. Aiken is entitled to speak plainly by virtue of his position as elected leader of the Republican Party in one of the two remaining Republican States. And he is properly concerned with something far more important than the feelings of those who may regard themselves as outraged by his outspoken comment.

He is looking toward the future of a party which has held a very great place in American history and whose function today should be, but is not, that of an intelligent and forceful opposition. If the Governor of Vermont finds that future black the only constructive course is frankly to say why, regardless of the toes which may be trodden in the process.

In his denunciation of "the baneful influence of the Southern committeemen," in his criticism of the "internal bickering, hopeless ambitions and lack of direction" in the party high command, Gov. Aiken merely voices comment which is customary wherever two or more Republicans are gathered together. It was time for a party spokesman of repute to speak out honestly on the subject.

The weaknesses and deficiencies of the Republican Party will not be eliminated by any vain pretense that they have no substance. So Gov. Aiken is sensible as well as courageous in spreading dirty linen in the public view. Many will resent this open display as calculated to cause Republicanism immediate embarrassment and discomfiture. But that is the short-range viewpoint of personal interest.

Everyone with an objective outlook on the future of the minority party, everyone who can appreciate that its regeneration is of vital national importance, will also realize that in the rebuilding of any structure a realistic examination of the foundations comes first.

Ifs And Buts.

"If," says Prof. Holland D. Roberts, of Stanford University, "we replaced the obsolete, sterile curriculum of our schools with a dynamic purpose to build originating, participating human beings, we could produce a nation of singers, artists and scientists in a single generation."

If all educators are agreed that the present system is sterile; if all are of one mind concerning what is at once dynamic and admirable; and if, as he seems to believe, the student is always potter's clay and not occasionally mud; then, the professor, beyond question, is right as right can be.

But if educators of different schools have, to date, cheerfully worked at cross purposes, if, as sometimes seems the case, the more intelligent they are the more prone they are to disagree one with the other; and if, as it has frequently been bruited about, you can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear; why, then, there is an off chance that the professor is mistaken.

Much virtue in "if"; but, it may be, more cogency in "but".

"Then everything went black and I shot him," said a woman on trial for the murder of her husband. The bullet penetrated the man's heart. How's that for shooting in the dark?

A statistician says urban dwellers are taller than ruralites. He doesn't know why, but we can tell him: The legs of city people are pulled oftener.

What profiteth it a man to have a vocabulary of 20,000 words and not be able to say "No?"

Giving To The Chest.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is to be regretted that the Community Chest has not received enough for its needs. During the first week of the campaign for funds it was thought the quota could easily be reached, particularly, in view of the wholehearted response from persons with salaries in the middle brackets.

In our own case, we have also given our Christmas money to the Chest. My husband makes $2,600 a year, pays the rent for his parents who are without sufficient income to maintain themselves and we have two children in high school, for whom the past six Christmases have been pretty slim, but we stretched a point to remember them because their friends received nice gifts and we did not want them to feel slighted.

This year, however, in order to pay off some old debts, we asked these young ones to sit in on our budget conferences and they, themselves, have suggested ways and means of cutting corners—they make and take their own lunches to school, see only one show a month, clean and press their own clothes, and in countless ways help to make ends meet, though having no outside work while attending school.

It was they who suggested we give no presents in the family this year but contribute our Christmas money to the less fortunate, although there are things they really need such as sweaters to replace those now too small and too much mended. My mother-in-law has needed a new winter coat for four years, yet is so unselfish and grateful for what we do for them that she asked me not to send her one.

If everybody who has a job would give in this spirit they would learn that "it is more blessed to give than to receive" so that hope and a little brightness may come to those who are living in darkness and despair. In addition to our Christmas money we have contributed 1 per cent of my husband's salary, payable in three installments, and he will wear his old overcoat, and I'll wear mine, another year. I know charity begins at home, but it doesn't end there!

Taxes And Housing.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

With the launching of the Presidential housing plan, or in anticipation of its acceptance, the prospective home owner will be confronted with a land boom as always comes to absorb a large share of the profits from any material increase of productive activity.

The why of this is that we tax land but lightly though there are plenty of us who know that in such case the higher the tax the lower the selling price, which may be carried to the point of removing all incentive to land ownership save for its best use. On the other hand we tax building materials cumulatively from their first appearance in the raw through their various shapings and combinings for structural use, knowing equally well that in this case we are increasing their cost to the user by more than the total of the tax. We tax both capital and labor in their earnings and tools to the discouragement of their activities. And finally on the building they erect we levy a tax so long as it stands, so that in the course of some 30 years the owner pays a second time in addition to cost of repairs for the right to a home of his own, with only the prospect of continuing payments while he lives and owns it.

These conditions are in themselves a sufficient explanation for the long-continued lag in building complained of in the message as a drag on all industry and trade.

It should be plain to the last man on the street that were these taxes on building materials and buildings shifted to land values to cut the cost of all building factors without affecting essential public revenues, the housing problem and its poor bedraggled relation, the slum problem, would speedily resolve themselves without the intervention of a Federal program to add to the complications and cost of government.

Wages And Hours Bill.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The wages and hours bill is fundamentally wrong. It contravenes human rights and the privilege of a voluntary contract between employer and employe. It destroys the merit system of giving value for value. Any law that destroys these considerations is fundamentally wrong and is unconstitutional.

We concede the right of collective bargaining between employer and employes, but that does not deprive the individual from his right of independent bargaining with his employer or any other employer. All employes cannot be placed into the same mold, neither can all enterprises and employments be measured by the same standards of value. The uniform minimum wages and maximum hours bill rides roughshod over these essential distinctions and human limitations. Why should a person who lacks ability and efficiency be paid the same wages as experts and accomplished workers?

The most dangerous innovation in the proposed legislation is the denial of the right of a voluntary contract to labor, or to employ labor. If the Government has a right to say that I shall work 40 hours each week, it has the right to say that I shall work 30 hours, or 20 hours, or 10 hours, or not at all, or continously. As a free citizen I cannot concede any such arbitrary right to any human government.

The President's Language.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

We note with apprehension and regret that "English as she is spoke" should have been dragged into the light of public discussion via a Presidential oration. The lady prof. says the President's language is punk, and, persisted in, will completely corrupt the younger generation. Others rise in stout defense. The President himself gets a laugh out of it and says all parties concerned are all wet, not to say saturated.

The taxpayer querulously demands, why can't they take the business bust-up seriously and forget such clatter.

Our opinion is the President had too much faith in the assistant who carpentered the offending speech to read it in advance to detect fox passes.

Prussian Love?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The story is told by a testy old Prussian king who wanted his subjects to idolize him and also to be busy every waking moment of their lives.

On one of his frequent walks abroad to observe the evidences of both desires, he caught an old market woman who had forgotten her knitting, and had fled in terror at his approach. Exasperated rather than appeased by her attempts at explanation of her forgetfulness and consequent flight, he resorted to corrective measures with his cane, exclaiming, "But I want you to love me (whack), I want you to love me, love me (whack, whack)."

Japan is accused of borrowing so many western ideas, I wonder if she hasn't borrowed this idea of inspiring love from her Prussian friends, in her treatment of China.

Monopoly Preventive.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, told the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America in an address entitled "The Unsolved Problem of Monopoly," that there is an urgent need for a thorough revision of the Federal antitrust laws, both in the interest of the consuming public and of the manufacturers themselves. He declared that despite many years of debate and controversy, with conflicting interpretations of these laws by the courts, no satisfactory solution of the monopoly problem had been found.

In arriving at this discouraging conclusion the Attorney General is gravely mistaken. The solution of the monopoly problem has been found, and is being actively advocated by an increasingly large number of persons who know how permanently to abolish monopoly. These persons have accepted the economic principles laid down by Henry George in "Progress and Poverty," which, while dealing chiefly with the great fundamental monopoly of private ownership of the earth's surface, makes it clear that practically all monopolies owe their existence to laws giving special privileges to favored interests.

Proceeding from this standpoint, the followers of George believe that the only effective remedy for the monopoly conditions that now oppress the consumers of the Nation is: the radical reform of our laws so as to take for public purposes all the rental values of land, and the immediate repeal of the mass of class legislation that now fills our statute books.

That there can be no real monopolies without laws that operate to give some persons or corporations special advantages is a self-evident proposition. Under free competition the natural laws of the economic world would operate so as to give the consumers an opportunity to buy the various commodities they need at fair prices, and would-be monopolists would quickly find that they could not control the laws of supply and demand. It is solely because of class legislation that private enterprise is able in many cases to form combinations that rob the consumers.

The remedy, therefore, is not to be found, as the Attorney General seems to believe, in more tinkering with the antitrust laws, but in the repeal of the many foolish laws that make monopolies possible.

Comet In Bronze.

Louisiana is going to have a monument to Huey P. Long. A 30-foot shaft will be erected on the capitol grounds at Baton Rouge, to be topped by a 12-foot bronze statue of the Senator and Governor.

Huey in bronze? Alas, that such a rip-roaring figure should be immobilized in so static a medium. The world remembers Huey as a fiery personality—his head full of cockeyed ideas, his unsurpassed political machinery ready and entirely capable of putting those ideas into immediate action. He was meteoric; or, rather, a comet with a swishing tail, blazing fearfully across the wan Louisiana sky and lighting the heavens as far north as Washington. Every man a king, and Huey the king of them all.

But you cannot put a comet into bronze. Yet that is what Louisiana proposes to do. And there, 30 feet from the ground, with no heliotrope pajamas, a perch for pigeons, "till time shall be no more."

Uncle Glory.

USUALLY, Uncle Glory would appear in the morning, when we were wading in the branch catching minnows in tin cups. His call would come down the steep bank to us, and we'd go scrambling up to him, through the briars and gympsum weed, reaching in our pockets for pennies.

Uncle Glory would be groaning. His black face was full of the twisted, minute caverns you see in a burned-out cinder. His body was wrecked; when he hobbled, on the short crutch, his entire mid-section jerked almost to the ground, suddenly to jerk again upward as if either the crutch or his hips had springs.

He would call his wares, as we scrambled up to him, through the weeds. The voice, his racial voice, was like a drowned bell in the wrecked body, ding-donging his monotonous: "Goobers an' shabers, goobers and shabers." He intoned it while we held the pennies to him and while he was making the jim shaver, a nectar we bought for 2 cents.

I suppose you would call the jim shaver a soft drink. Uncle Glory carried its sweetening ingredient (a red fluid) in a bottle in his basket. In another bottle was plain water. In a tin can was some shaved ice. He would compound all these into a glass, and hand it to us. We would hand him two pennies and begin sipping the drink. We had to swallow it fast because he carried only one serving glass. And we never wanted to drink it quickly; children like to idle over something sweet.

When we finished, he would place a dirty cloth over his basket, and go hobbling down the road, calling: "Goobers an' shabers, goobers an' shabers." A swarm of flies always pursued him.

He would appear in the road on Sundays, dressed in a somber shabby suit someone had given him. He would then be in the seizures of his bodily pain, but more important fits of spiritual elevation which he seemed to ride as on a big white horse, when the day of Sabbath came. He didn't have any shavers or goobers then. Instead he carried a Gospel gun that roared a Jordan morning.

Some colored people had what you would call cabins on the road he hobbled down. They used to drink liquor of Saturday nights, and in my own bedroom, not so far away, I could hear their laughter. And the insistent guitar that strummed no music, but just notes, unintelligibly but so terribly insistent that I lost the laughter, after a while, in the guitar beats, later to find them become one again and then subtly divide into a savage rhythm that set me mad with the strumming and the night.

The colored pepole would be drowsing on their porches when Uncle Glory would light into them. He would be afraid to point his crutch sharply at them. But he would lift it slightly, its blunt old end looking like the Retribution eye.

"You folks is hell bent," he would scream. "You folks is goin' to hell. You studin' 'bout nothin' but gin and evil, and de chuch down de en' o' dis road is de savin' grace fu' de whole likes o' youh."

He would raise his crutch in his vast spiritual agitation and almost spill in the road. The only answer I ever heard him get was:

"Dat ol' man keep comin' 'round here and worrin' me . . . what dat 'ol man want keep on comin' round here and worrin' me for?"

He would hobble away, crying: "De chuch is down dis road, sinner; yuh better come wid me . . . God gwine smote youh, sinner . . . youh better be comin' down dis road wid me, sinner . . . "

I followed him one morning down the road, to the colored church in the grove. He didn't go inside, but stood by a window that a warm hymn was flooding through. He had started singing with the hymn when he first caught the sound, as he came through the churchyard. His voice was coarse, but true to the melody as a tuning fork.

Soon will come the harvest,
And the day of reaping . . .
We shall come rejoicing
Bringing in the sheaves . . .

He was singing from a terrible groan in his heart, an aching, reaching misery that left him trembling, hoarse on the high notes and fingering a conjure bag secreted around his neck. He seemed bursting in a comfort too great to endure, and a security pillared on a hymn and propped by the equal juices of conjure that keep an old man from harm.

"Dat's right," he fairly bursted on me . . . "We's bringin' in de sheaves." I asked him why he didn't go inside with the others. "I ain't been in dat chuch for nigh on forty years; des ol' laigs won't histe me up de steps; but I been a-singin' by dis winder and dey gwyne bring me in wid de sheaves. Dey ain' no steps in heaben to clim' . . . "

He died not so long afterward; went out in his sleep in a vast peacefulness, I imagine, on a brimming flood of jim shaver juice that washes the shores of the Green Pastures.

Hints To Tax Reviewers.

HENRY MORGENTHAU'S statement denying that Herbert Hoover had been persecuted or otherwise unfairly treated by the income tax reviewers and inviting information from anyone who believes that he has been mistreated may be taken as an intramural warning to the members of the reviewing force if not as a change of policy. In a pervious announcement the department has taken occasion to caution the investigators against persecution of those individuals whose returns were publicly dissected by the committee on tax avoidance.

PEGLER.

So that makes twice in less than a year that the Treasury has found it necessary to remind the agents that they are not authorized to bounce citizens around for personal, political or other ulterior reasons.

There would seem to be an implied admission concealed somewhere in this, but whether there is or not the fact remains that the agents still have the power to do so. This power is that twilight zone, as the Treasury describes it, of cases in which the agent may make his own interpretation and allow or disallow claims according to his disposition and delve into private matters which can have no conceivable bearing on the correctness or honesty of the income tax return.

• • • •

THAT THIS ZONE contains possibilities of graft and malicious harassment has been admitted, and that some of the agents have been needlessly overbearing in their dealing with the taxpayers is plainly suggested by two admonitions. Given such power, men will be tempted to regard themselves as official bulldozers, and it would have been strange had some of them not come to feel that they were persons to be fawned upon and placated.

The situation is not peculiar to the present Administration, however, for as long ago as 1927 the late Senator Schall, of Minnesota, wrote that "the agents can trump up taxes and charges against the perfectly decent and innocent taxpayer and magnify and twist pretexts to do it."

"Having started in pursuit," Senator Schall wrote, "the agent apparently has or assumes authority to impute fraud to the most innocent transactions and the perfectly innocent taxpayer must submit to the indignities, odium and accusations of fraud and criminality and be put to heavy expense to prove to his own Government that he is not a criminal. Cases have been known where to hold any tax due would be so technical as to be fanciful and where no actual gain was had by the taxpayer. Yet marauding agents have charged fraud and criminality, the bureaus apparently hoping that the charges might favor the bureau in forcing a settlement from the taxpayer. A citizen, smarting under false accusations, may go to Washington seeking an impartial hearing, but he is advised not to show his indignation to those before whom the hearing is had because they can make it go hard with him. Advice is unhesitatingly given to crook the knee to those before whom one goes for a hearing, and these hearings are little better than a star-chamber affair, where every bias and partiality are against the taxpayer from beginning to end.

• • • •

"TO GIVE the overseership of the American citizen to the operators of this enforcing agency is a flagrant abuse of power and a grave menace to the rights of the citizens. These operators soon sense the lodgment of this arbitrary authority and seek to exercise it. On their opinion, desire or whim any decent citizen may be charged with fraud. This opens up a field for all kinds of evil, permitting all forms of secret persecution under legal disguise, giving opportunity for revenge and spite. The agents and the department, often without warrant, pile up such an exorbitant amount of taxes that the taxpayer is hamstrung. The amount trumped up against him often is so large that to give a bond in double that amount in order that an appeal may be taken is often beyond his ability."

Senator Schall dealt with conditions under Calvin Coolidge, who has never been accused of unreasonable hostility to the economic royalist, and there was nothing in the state papers of the President then to encourage the agents to harass taxpayers. As to whether the agents have been encouraged to treat 'em rough by some announcements of the Administration since 1929 is a matter of opinion.

This may be said for Henry Morgenthau, however, that he has at least taken cognizance of the fact that some of the agents had become imbued with the spirit of the old prohibition agent.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Name—World.
Age—A few billion years.
Color—Black and blue. (Very).
Record—Born a ball of fire and how headed for a similar finish. Was thought to have cooled off after the first billion years, but recent history proves to the contrary. Early associates were queer monsters, and it is now back with them. Only difference is that they are now called emperors, dictators and war ministers.

• • • •

Early years were marked by high temper, quarrelsome nature, acts of great violence and an inability to distinguish between right and wrong. Capable of acts of great savagery up to seventeenth century, when it showed marked signs of reform. Took interest in the finer things of life, signed the pledge, threw away its brass knuckles and even went in for art and literature.

• • • •

1914—Found in Berlin drunk and disorderly, waving firearms in a menacing manner, hurling insults in all directions and using shocking language. Effort to arrest proved failure. Ran amuck for four years, pillaging, looting, burning and murdering.

• • • •

1918—Locked up on charge of assault, breach of peace, first-degree murder, arson, destruction of property, etc. Found to be a mental case. Operation on brain performed in Switzerland by international group of specialists. Recovered balance rapidly and seemed as good as new. Placed on parole.

• • • •

1918-1923—Conducted itself decently with only occasional flashes of irritability and impulsiveness. Doctors greatly encouraged.

• • • •

• • • •

1930—Woke up in gutter, stripped and penniless. Couldn't remember anything.

• • • •

1930-1935—Longest hangover in history. Seemed to have lost morale and mental stamina. Very muddled in its reasoning, talked incoherently of "abundant life," "less work," "bigger picnics" and "maximum returns for minimum efforts."

• • • •

1935—Caught in brutal assault on Ethiopia. Showed old-time brutality and impatience at restraint. Jekyll-Hyde personality manifesting self again. Doctors very depressed.

• • • •

1936—Caught on a rampage in Spain with torch, hand grenades and other felonious weapons. Refused to give right name and defied forces of law and order.

1937—Discovered renewing criminal career in Japan and China, counterfeiting human emotions of decency, tearing down traditions and cutting the throat of civilization to accompaniment of waltz music.

Pennsylvania Liberty

By Eugene Pharo.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Philadelphia.

THE FIRST ARTICLE of the Federal Bill of Rights is being given a thorough work-out in Pennsylvania as an unplanned accompaniment to the State's current celebration of its ratification of the Constitution. For certain events impinge on every aspect of the article, from religious freedom, through freedom of speech and the press, to the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

Protection of these rights has come in the main from the courts, which in some cases have reversed the action of public officials. What will be the outcome of others, remains to be seen.

In the latter class falls a recent challenge to constituted authority in a protest brought by the Communist Party to compel the city to rent to it the municipal Convention Hall, for a mass meeting in January in memory of Nicolai Lenin. They report that on November 10 the board of trustees of the building refused their request on the ground that the meeting was not in the public interest. And their protest has taken the form of an application for a rule to show cause, to Common Pleas Court No. 5 in Philadelphia. Among those named as defendants are Gov. Earle, Mayor Wilson, the president of the city council, the president of the board of education, the superintendent of schools, the State superintendent of public instruction, and the secretary of forests and waters.

But this case, while the most recent and with possibilities of confusion and melodrama greater than with some of the others, is only one of several; the others falling chiefly under the heads of religious freedom and freedom of the press.

Freedom Of Religion Appropriately Discussed.

THOSE BEARING ON religion are most characteristic of the State, for they bring into prominence the "Plain people" whose forbears were attracted by the policies of William Penn. Furthermore the reference to Penn is emphasized by the fact that one of the most striking recent decisions was made by a Quaker judge, and applied to a sect that is not peculiar to Pennsylvania—that of Jehovah's Witnesses.

In this instance Federal District Court Judge Albert B. Maris—descendant of a Quaker magistrate, George Maris, who came to America in 1683—ruled that two children, one 12 and the other 13, were within their constitutional rights when, in the Minersville, Pa., school in 1935, they refused, because of religious scruples, to salute the flag of the United States.

Another test of what is or is not interference with religious freedom is in refusal of an Amish farmer of Chester county to permit his 14-year-old daughter to attend school. Further education for her, he has claimed, is against the principles of his religion, and he has spent some time in jail, upon refusing to pay fines, when local magistrates failed to see the matter his way. At present he is free, while a United States district court, confessing that it has doubts about jurisdiction, has the case under advisement.

The Amish and Mennonites have been involved also in a case that has received wide publicity, because of their resistance to the erection of a consolidated school building in East Lampeter Township, partly with PWA funds. Besides stating their religious objections to the use of automobiles, which would be required to transport their children to the new school, they have denounced the immorally extravagant nature of the new venture.

In the latest court decision, handed down at the last of November, United States District Court Judge George A. Welsh reaffirmed their right to use their little red schoolhouses, and lent his support to their criticism of, as he put it, "Government benevolence, not to say extravagance." This last the Amish objected to on legal grounds as well, asserting that the PWA grant forced the school district to exceed its bonded debt in order to supply its share of funds.

Two Controversies Turn To Freedom Of The Press.

FREEDOM of the press, or of the news, has come under discussion in two recent instances: one of them involving a kind of publication, and the other the newsreels. The first impressed some observers as of more than usual interest, because it centered in the school system. This was at Chester High School, where a senior pupil was suspended from the school for having had the temerity to issue a mimeographed paper, entitled "Common Sense," protesting against the over-crowded condition of the school, and calling on the townspeople to support a movement for a new and larger building, for which the Public Works Administration had offered a grant, but which had been decided against by the Chester School authorities.

Suspension of the pupil led to a strike of 300 others, which was ended on December 1 with victory resting with the authorities, inasmuch as the pupil, John Gilman, when informed that he would have to submit his publication to censorship, decided to suspend it. And he was allowed to return to school.

Nevertheless he was reported to have said: "The strike is over, but the fight is still on. We have asked the American Civil Liberties Union to help us in attacking the constitutionality of the State School Code, because we think the code should guarantee freedom of the press for students."

The other recent instance bearing on freedom of the news was in a reversal of the State Board of Censors by Judge Louis E. Levinthal, in Common Pleas Court No. 6, Philadelphia. Last March the board refused to permit the newsreel "Spain in Flames" to be shown in Pennsylvania, and was valiantly supported by Gov. Earle, who claimed that the film was designed to encourage enlistment by Americans in the Spanish government army.

An appeal was taken by Dr. Jesse H. Holmes and Anne M. W. Pennypacker, as members of the North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy. And Judge Levinthal decided in their favor on the ground that the censors had exceeded their authority in interfering with dissemination of news. Certain paragraphs of his decision discussed the extent to which pictures lately have assumed news importance.

Judge Upholds Pictures As Information Mediums.

IN STATING that "our Legislature has wisely exempted the newsreel from all interference," Judge Levinthal said. "The recent development of picture pages and sections in newspapers and of theaters devoted primarily to the display of newsreels, all attest the important and vital role of pictures as a medium of information, opinion, and education." And he quoted the much publicized sentence of the late Supreme Court Justice Holmes: "I think that we should be eternally vigilant against attempts to check the expression of opinion that we loathe and believe to be fraught with death, unless they so imminently threaten immediate interference with the lawful and pressing purposes of the law that an immediate check is required to save the country."

Judge Levinthal added the caution that censorship that "may be used to curb our enemies' opinions may be utilized tomorrow to suppress our own most treasured convictions."

There are other cases, and beginnings of cases, current in the State, some of which are certain to bring to mind again and again in the days to come such assertions as those of Judge Levinthal. Doubtless there will be conflicting assertions, for there is a strong popular feeling in opposition to Communist, Nazi, and other foreign propaganda. And organizations devoted to defeating it are on the alert, as was evidenced lately when the German-American League planned a demonstration before a statue here of Pastorius, German-Quaker founder of Germantown, and the "Citizens' Anti-Nazi League," Regina Brownstein, executive secretary, publicly protested at such an alleged travesty of freedom.

Treasury Inquires How Jersey Man Got 2 $10,000 Bills

Matawan, N. J., Dec. 6 (AP).—Police Chief Edwin Sloat said today Treasury agents were seeking to learn how a man sentenced to jail on disorderly conduct charges acquired two $10,000 bank notes found in his possession.

Sloat quoted a man booked as John A. Walsh, 26, as saying he obtained the Federal Reserve Bank certificates from a Washington, D. C., relative.

Treasury agents said the certificates were those used in interdepartmental transactions of the Government in Washington and were not negotiable currency. They believed they had been collected as souvenirs during the postoffice fire in Washington three years ago.

Delbos On Tour

By Barnet Nover

France Courts Its Allies.

IN THE EUROPE of today the two most powerful combinations are those of Great Britain and France on the one hand and Germany and Italy on the other.

Each of these combinations happens to have a relatively narrow effectiveness in Europe at large. Great Britain and France while wholly committed to the defense of each other's territory and to the protection of Belgium against outside attack by no means see eye to eye on all international problems. On the other hand the impressive facade of the German-Italian combination hides chronic suspicions, divergent interests and age-old conflicts of policy.

Yet all attempts made by Great Britain and France to drive a wedge between the two Fascist powers and by Germany and Italy to separate the great European democracies have so far met with failure.

THIS CIRCUMSTANCE has considerably increased the diplomatic importance of the smaller nations. With few exceptions, such as Albania, they are no longer pawns on the diplomatic chessboard as they were in the days before 1914. They now enjoy, within certain broad limits, considerable freedom of action. And because that is so they are being courted by both sides.

Soon after the World War ended France made an alliance with Poland, largest of the states to emerge from the collapse of the Russian, German and Austrian empires. Later, alliances were made by France with Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia.

In addition, these three states made a series of alliances with each other collectively known as the Little Entente. The object in each instance was to prevent an upset of the status quo whether by Hungary or Germany or any other power.

IN RECENT YEARS each of these smaller powers while continuing its old alliances has shown a disposition to listen to the siren voices from the enemy camp. Poland, for instance, made a ten-year agreement with Nazi Germany in 1934 the effect of which was to cool Franco-Polish friendship to a considerable extent. This so alarmed France that, the following year, the French government at the instance of Pierre Laval took out reinsurance in the form of an alliance with Soviet Russia.

Rumania and Yugoslavia, too, have shown a disposition to loosen without entirely destroying the bonds uniting them to France and come to terms with Hitler's Reich. Only Czechoslovakia has been an unswerving ally of the French republic.

THE CREATION of the Berlin-Rome axis has intensified the Fascist pressure on these allies of France. And by the same token it has made it possible for them to play a more independent role in European affairs than heretofore. For now they could move in either of two directions. They could align themselves in one way or another with Germany and Italy. Or they could cling to the French alliance. But because this was so France could no longer take its allies for granted.

M. Barthou, France's foreign minister in 1934, discovered that when he sought to persuade Poland to approve the so-called eastern Locarno plan by which all the nations of eastern Europe, including Russia, would be linked in a regional non-aggression pact. Unwilling to weaken its new-found friendship with Nazi Germany, Poland refused, and the scheme died a-borning. And France's more recent efforts to get Rumania to ally itself with Russia, as Czechoslovakia had done, while giving promise of success as long as Nicolas Titulescu was foreign minister at Bucharest fell to the ground when the latter was forced out of office.

• • • •

AT THE PRESENT moment Yvon Delbos, French foreign minister, is making the rounds of allied capitals. He has already visited Warsaw and before he returns will have visited Bucharest, Belgrade and Prague as well.

None of these powers has any intentions of smashing the link to France so, from this point of view Delbos' tour is certain to be touted a decided success. But merely to keep the alliances formally on the books is not enough for France. The Little Entente nations and Poland must also be persuaded to curb whatever ardor they may have for the Berlin-Rome axis and for the so-called anti-Communist agreement of Germany, Italy and Japan. And, in addition, Delbos' task is to persuade Czechoslovakia to make some kind of concessions to the Third Reich to ease existing Czech-German tensions.

DELBOS' TASK is not easy. The re-armament of the Rhineland plus the return of Belgium to its pre-war status of neutral have made it very difficult for France to come to the aid of its eastern allies. And in three of the four countries, Czechoslovakia being the exception, totalitarian ideas are rampant.

However, the French foreign minister is not without his trump cards. If France is relatively weaker, from a military point of view, than she once was, she is still very strong and daily becomes stronger. Moreover, she is in a far better position than either Germany and Italy or both combined to provide needed loans to its allies. Most important of all, the Franco-British exchange of views at London recently showed the two democratic powers standing shoulder to shoulder.

Under the circumstances it is not at all unlikely that the Delbos' tour may strengthen the old ties binding France and her continental allies. But it is doubtful if these alliances can, at the moment, be restored to their pristine strength. For the small powers, too, have discovered that in present-day European diplomacy it pays to have more than one string to one's bow.

By William Lyon Phelps

"The Leavenworth Case" Reissued.

I AM VERY GLAD indeed that the publishers have within the last few weeks got out a new edition of a remarkable detective story, which was first published in 1878.

The author was Anna Katharine Green. She was born in Brooklyn, November 11, 1846; and she died April 11, 1935, nearly 90 years old. In 1884 she was married to Charles Rohlfs, a designer of furniture (called the Rohlfs furniture) known in both Europe and in America. In his early days he was an actor, for years associated with Booth and Barrett. He is, I believe, still living.

• • • •

THIS NEW and very cheap edition of "The Leavenworth Case" has a preface by S. S. Van Dine, author of the famous detective stories about Philo Vance. He says in this preface that Anna Katharine Green in "The Leavenworth Case" had a very great influence on the whole school of detective fiction of the twentieth century. When her book appeared, it attracted immediate attention and seemed like something new and strange; for it came some years before Sherlock Holmes was born.

Shanks' Mare

When persons are spoken of as touring the country, the picture it brings up in the public mind is that of a lot of people riding around in automobiles or automobiles plus trailers and putting up at tourist camps. A lot of seeing the country is done that way, but not all. There are those who prefer to travel under their own power, whether on foot or on bicycles, thus taking to the open road in the old meaning of the term. This class is so numerous, in fact, that a movement known as American Youth Hostels has taken form to encourage the building of shelters in which these pedestrians can find lodgings.

President Roosevelt, accepting the honorary presidency of this association, recalls the days he spent as a youth bicycling in Europe and says of them: "That was the finest education I ever had. The more one circulates in his travels, the better citizen he becomes, not only of his own country, but of the world." In this country, since 1933, 110 hostels have been established on foot and bicycle trails, on streams or extended bridle trails, throughout New England, Pennsylvania, Michigan and California. The usual charge for a night's lodging is 25 cents.

We are apt to think, as we see highways jammed with automobiles, that nobody walks nowadays; but evidently the age-old diversion of pedestrianism is not dead, and there are many who prefer Shanks' Mare to the Straight Eight.

Tom McCarthy

THE CHIEF CONCENTRATES on the stomach. He may give passing notice to the rest of the anatomy but the stomach is his main stock in trade.

"Did you ever see an Indian with a bald head or wearing glasses, or with flat feet?" the chief asks.

The answer always comes back "No."

"The reason you have not seen this is because their simple but effective exercises have given them perfect bodies, keen eyesight, luxuriant hair and graceful high-arched feet." And the chief can say all that in one breath.

McCARTHY.

If at that point you bring up the matter of how few Indians you have really seen, the chief will merely invite your inspection. Removing his sombrero he will invite you to look at his liberally adorned noggin. Certainly not luxuriant, but definitely healthy, will probably be your verdict.

You can perceive that the chief does not wear glasses. And since you cannot see his feet you may reasonably presume that his Garbos are "graceful and high-arched." That carries the battle his way.

Once he has you on the defensive he goes for the stomach. Napoleon's army may have traveled on its stomach but Chief Lone West makes the stomach pay cash dividends.

Chief Lone West for the benefit of those who don't follow the fortunes of George Marshall's "Redskins" in their weekly football sessions at Griffith Stadium, is the gentleman who puts the Indian sign on opposing teams. He also does a war dance between the halves for the delectation of the cash customers.

BUT INDIAN SIGNS and war dances are just sidelines with Chief Lone West. His real joy is in giving what he calls his "Comedy, Pep and Health Talks." Then he distributes funny little gadgets to the audience at $3 to $5 a throw. These are designed, nay guaranteed, to make fat people so slender they dare not venture into a high wind without ballast. On the other hand, for the "Slim Jims" of the world, Chief Lone West offers the opporunity of looking like him.

With the emphasis on the stomach, the chief tells you to "S-T-R-E-T-C-H for Health." He doesn't put the hyphens in, but that's the way he says it.

But Chief Lone West wasn't always a "S-t-r-e-t-c-h-for Health" man. No siree, he has an amazing career behind him. Novelists wouldn't dare write it. It's one of those stranger than fiction things. In fact, there's scarcely any explanation for it, except that the chief is half Cherokee and half Irish.

Presumably the Indian half did the feats and his Irish blood enables him to sit back and tell about it. In fact the chief is something of a raconteur.

He was a stunt man for the movies, a college football player for the University of California, a coming "heavy" in the early day serial shows and an exile in the Everglades. Those give just a hint of the chief's career.

BUT WHEN THE CHIEF came up to the office the thing I was most interested in was his outfit. He walks around the streets daily in a black sombrero, barber pole socks, striped pants and a lumberjack just loaded with Indian signs.

"Chief, how do you get away with it?" I asked him.

"Psychology," said the chief. Then he went on to explain that with a $30 outfit he caused hundreds of dollars worth of attention. He said that he acted as sort of a walking advertisement. The chief figured that it was good psychology to excite curiosity.

"When I walk into an office," he said, "to sell my 'comedy, pep and health talks' to the boss, he usually comes out just to get a look at me. If I went up dressed in a business suit they wouldn't bother to give me a hearing. But when the secretary reports to the boss that a wild-looking Indian wants to speak to him, he comes out just to take a look."

However, once and a while the chief's outfit causes him a little trouble. But he knows how to handle that. The other day an alcoholic wit approached with a rather unflattering remark

"What's a big bohunk like you doing all dressed up like a stick of peppermint candy?" the drunk said. But the chief didn't unleash his extra healthy self in a task of annihilation. He just leaned down from his better than six feet two inches and looked at his tormenter.

"I ought to kill you," the chief said. And then he told me that he paused for dramatic effect before concluding, "but I won't."

"It sobered him up like that," said the chief.

ALL OF THIS was rather off the subject, but we finally got around to his exerciser which allows you to "S-t-r-e-t-c-h to health."

The chief showed me diagrams of how it works. You put your feet in a couple of stirrups and then pull back on a wooden bar attached to the stirrups by a rubber band. This gives you the effect of rowing a boat, according to the chief. And it gives you what he calls an Indian stomach? I suppose it might also be called a "Row Boat Stomach," or even a "Pair of Stirrups, Wooden Bar and Rubber Band Stomach." But the chief prefers to identify it with the Indians.

"There's only one thing to beware of when using it," the chief said. "Sit on the floor with the exerciser as if rowing a boat. Then if the stirrups fly off they'll go over your head.

"But if you stand when using it and they fly off your feet, they'll have to send a boy out to find your head.

"Funniest thing I ever saw" the chief said, "was the time a big prize fighter used my exerciser while standing up. He wanted to show how strong he was. So he stood in the stirrups and pulled the bar almost up to his chin.

"He'd have been all right," the chief said, "if his hands hadn't been wet from sweat. Well, he got the bar up to his chin . . . and it slipped. After the bar hit they carried him out of the gymnasium. He couldn't walk."

It appears from what the chief said that the only safe way to "S-t-r-e-t-c-h to Health" is to sit on the floor. Indian stomach may be achieved while seated, but a fractured skull or a broken leg are the alternatives if you stand.

Text of Sumner Welles' G. W. Forum Address

During the now many years in which I have been privileged to be an observer of the development of closer relations between the United States and its sister republics of the New World, I have more than once been struck with an apparent impatience—I might almost say intolerance—on the part of certain sections of our public here in the United States with regard to the way in which our American neighbors solve their purely domestic and internal problems. One of the greatest advances that has been made in inter-American relations was the agreement on the part of each American republic to refrain from any form of interference in the internal affairs of the other American republics. If that solemn obligation on the part of the twenty-one American governments is to be maintained at its full value, I venture to express the opinion that the people in all of the republics as well should likewise observe the spirit thereof.

Only a few weeks ago there took place in one of the greatest republics of the world, the United States of Brazil, a change in the governmental structure of that nation. The existing constitution was abrogated and a new constitution proclaimed subject to a subsequent plebiscite of the people. Almost before the bare announcement of what had taken place appeared in our news columns, editorials were being published throughout the United States undertaking to interpret the significance of the event and asserting that the change which had been brought about implied a complete departure from the democratic traditions of the Western Hemisphere and an assimilation of ideologies which have been recently developed in other portions of the world.

A little later, when the true situation was revealed, it was made clear that the original assumptions on the part of a great portion of our press and the portentous declarations of certain of our statesmen were unfounded on fact.

There would seem to have been made manifest once more that evidence of an insistence on the part of so great a proportion of our people not only that they are competent and authorized to interpret and to pass judgment upon what our American neighbors are doing within the realm of their strictly domestic affairs, but likewise to determine for our American neighbors how their strictly private affairs should be conducted. Here was the case of the great republic of Brazil undergoing a critical moment in its national development. • • • The Brazilian people have never asked of us other than increasingly close political and commercial understanding. On their part that is al lthat the American people have asked of Brazil. Our friendship has become traditional and will not only be maintained, but will be enhanced throughout the years to come. And yet, when this recent crisis occurred in the national life of the Brazilian people, a large portion of our people and of our press, instead of awaiting with tolerance and with friendly sympathy the moment when the Brazilian people had been enabled to determine for themselves the proper solution of their own problems, undertook to determine for them how the problem should be solved and to a large degree indulged in vehement recriminations predicated upon false premises and even falser conclusions.

I have cited this instance at some length because it is so recent in the minds of all of us. It would be difficult for me to emphasize too strongly my belief that one of the most salient principles of the "good neighbor" policy which we have been carrying out here in Washington during these last five years is to refrain from minding your neighbor's business for him.

We too often forget here in the United States that, with the exception of our neighbor Canada, the other great independent nations of the New World spring from a heritage which is different from ours, have inherited certain concepts of government and of law which are divergent from our own, are the product of a civilization distinct from, although quite as advanced and quite as admirable as, the Anglo-Saxon civilization from which we ourselves derive, and very naturally by consequence employ in the solution of their national problems methods which at times are distinct from those which we ourselves employ in striving toward objectives which may in turn be quite the same as theirs.

There comes to my mind the not infrequent instances where certain governments in other American republics, in a spirit of the truest democracy have undertaken to remedy underlying social and economic conditions—the inheritance from their colonial days—conditions which have resulted in the placing of a very small percentage of the people in control of the agricultural land and of the natural resources of the entire country. An effort has been made to bring about a more equitable distribution of these holdings so that the average man and woman might be enabled to support themselves and their families upon the land, and in order that the people as a whole might obtain a higher standard of living. In some of these countries where American nationals have undertaken to reside, the holdings which they had acquired have been affected by the operation of such policies. The protests of these United States citizens to their own Government have been in certain instances loud and angry, and when they have been asked what they felt this Government should do in the matter, their replies have been lacking in precision except for their general conclusion that this Government should take steps promptly to eliminate in these neighboring countries what they term the "communistic" policies from which they claim they have suffered.

"Now, there are, of course, no two principles in international law more salutary in themselves and more generally recognized than the principle that an alien residing in a foreign country is subject to the laws of the country where he lives to the same extent as are the nationals of that country and, second, that should the legitimately acquired properties of aliens residing in a foreign country be expropriated, for the purpose of advancing the public welfare of that country, such aliens are entitled to equitable compensation therefor.

Although our individual inheritance may differ, there is not an independent nation of this continent that has not achieved its independence and that has not maintained it through the expenditure of the blood and of the treasure of its citizens. The love of individual liberty and of freedom is just as deeply ingrained in the national consciousness of our neighbors as it is in our own.

The advance which all of the American nations have made towards the achievement of a real inter-American understanding crystallized at the Buenos Aires conference which assembled just a year ago. This achievement we must imperatively maintain and enlarge. The immediate and pressing need is a wider comprehension on the part of each one of us, not only of our neighbors' problems, but of the causes of those problems.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Washington wears her diplomats prominently on her bosom, as a woman wears her orchids or gardenias. . . They are fully as ornamental, but not much more useful . . .

They are definitely orchidaceous.

Of the 54 accredited ambassadors and ministers, I doubt that more than a mere handful see President Roosevelt or Secretary Hull oftener than once or twice a year, and then under the most formal or perfunctory circumstances.

• • • •

Nor do they see a great deal of the important lesser American officials, through whom ideas might be exchanged informally with our Government, or the foundations for future understandings laid. (Perhaps it's against the rules.)

Actually, most of the diplomats play about as important a role in international affairs as Elsa Maxwell or the last Prince Mdvani . . .

They see much the same sort of people Elsa does—playboys, dilletantes, dowagers of the 84-gun-frigate variety, stuffed shirts, giddy hostesses, Liberty Leaguers, the cafe 400's, and self-made American Fascists.

• • • •

It's rather a pity, because most of them are sensitive, intelligent, competent men, who would enjoy diplomatic work more than they do diplomatic play . . . They'd like to interpret their countries to Americans who matter . . . They'd like even more to warn their chiefs of the inevitable American coupe de grace to their adventurous schemes.

• • • •

But the cards are stacked against them . . . The day of the Talleyrands and the Metternichs is gone. Occasionally a Von Ribbentrop gains the ear of an Edward VIII, because he happens to be the kind of a night club comic opera king an ambassador can reach over a whisky and soda . . . And then the king is canned, for the same reasons that enabled the ambassador to get coxy with him in the first place.

• • • •

To judge by the associations of the diplomats, you'd think the navies of the world were made up of millionaires' yachts, and the armies composed of butlers and footmen, and trade agreements concluded with society dowagers who aren't quite sure whether Czechoslovakia lies between Germany and Poland or between Rumania and Bulgaria.

• • • •

Especially unhappy, pathetic and uncomfortable is the plight of the diplomats "representing" the militarist dictatorships to America . . .

The transparent frauds those sawdust Caesars (ther chiefs) practice on each other, the patent shams of their statecraft, the hollow lies they prepetrate on their own people, their medieval ruthlessness, their crass incompetence to obtain a ham sandwich for their dupes without paying for it with a soldier's life, makes their diplomats in America unable to meet an honest American eye squarely.

Rightly or wrongly, many Washingtonians regard them as yes men and stooges.

So the foreign diplomats in America largely put in their time entertaining the almost extinct dinosaurs of American life at parties with paper-thin sandwiches; seeing to it that visiting elks from their home countries meet the right girls; trying occasionally to help land a piddling order, going to Army-Navy football games, and turning a more or less inscrutable face toward this curious democracy at banal public functions. They doubtless have fun, but they must have their moments of frustration, too.

• • • •

A weekly poker party at which the ambassadors from London, Berlin, Paris, Rome, Moscow and Tokio could roll up their sleeves with Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull would do more to clarify international relations than all the cocktail and cavier diplomacy of the last five years . . .

But Messrs. Lindsay, Dieckhoff, Bonnet, Suvich, Troyanovsky and Saito would need a phone at their elbows to ask headquarters whether to draw to an inside straight. (And most of 'em are smarter than their bosses back home.)

• • • •

With this out of the question, I suggest that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull ring up Chamberlain and Hitler and Chautemps, Mussolini, Stalin and whoever is boss in Tokio, on the transatlantic oceanic telephone for a ten-minute chat every week and exchange pleasantries and dirty digs man to man, to augment the cloak-and-dagger conferences and the exchange of lies between the wrong people, which seems to be the stuff of modern diplomacy. Maybe the telephone can save us from skidding into the next cataclysm.

Hospital Site Use as Health Unit Doubted

Disapproval of Buying Homeopathic Building Is Predicted.

Disapproval of a remodeled Homeopathic Hospital as the new District public health center was predicted yesterday, while plans for a 14-point program to launch the most comprehensive health survey in the city's history were made public by Dr. Robert Oleson, assistant surgeon general of the United States Public Health Service.

The Georgetown Progressive Citizens' Association voted last night to ask Congress to appropriate more funds for Gallinger Hospital. Two other associations, the Manor Park and Takoma Park (D. C.) groups, opposed the use of the old Tuberculosis Hospital at Fourteenth and Upshur streets northwest as an annex to Gallinger while the Manor Park association further touched on the health problem in a resolution opposing any increase in the 1939 District budget "except such as might be made necessary" to provide better school facilities and to build an addition to Gallinger.

The Homeopathic Hospital was surveyed by Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, and Municipal Architect Nathan C. Wyeth at the request of the District Commissioners. They were to investigate its suitability as a health center and to suggest changes necessary and the probable cost of these changes.

Representative Ross Collins (Democrat), Mississippi, chairman of the House Appropriations sub-committee, was reported to have suggested use of the hospital to obviate construction of a health center on the site of the Jones School, First and L streets northwest. Congress already has appropriated $165,000 for the health center project.

May Build in Spring.

Unofficial estimates of the cost of buying and remodeling the Homeopathic Hospital have ranged from $200,000 to $300,000. Dr. Ruhland and Wyeth will report their findings to the Commissioners some time this week. Should the Homeopathic Hospital project be turned down, construction on the Jones School site is expected to be started in the spring.

Ranging from examination of conditions at the District dog pound to careful study of tuberculosis and venereal diseases, the survey is expected to take about two months to complete.

The Health Service is going forward with the study on the basis of a request made by Commissioner Allen to Surgeon General Thomas Parran for assistance in the survey. It is expected that the Commissioners will make a formal request to the Health Service at their regular meeting today.

A number of experts have already been selected by Dr. Olesen to participate in the survey and a complete staff will probably be named by tomorrow.

Sanitary engineering problems, Dr. Olesen said, will be in charge of Charles T. Wright, sanitary engineer of the Public Health Service.

The Health Service will not make a separate study of Gallinger and other District hospitals, it was learned. A special committee, appointed by the Academy of Medicine, will cover this phase of the survey and Dr. S. L. Christian will represent the Health Service on this committee, Olesen explained.

Survey of the venereal disease situation in the District, one of the most serious health problems confronting officials, will be under the direction of Dr. Raymond A. Vonderlehr, assistant surgeon general for the Health Service. Dr. Alfred J. Aselmyer has been named to assist Dr. Vonderlehr in this phase of the work.

Will Test Dairies.

The study of infant and child health, Dr. Olesen said, will be handled in co-operation with the Childrens Bureau. Dr. Martha Elliott, assistant chief of the bureau, will detail one of her staff members to assist in field work of this part of the study.

Another important section of the survey will be a minute examination of milk pasteurizing plants and ice cream factories, Dr. Olesen declared. Sanitary Engineer Frederic J. Moss, recognized as one of the outstanding experts in this field, will direct the work.

Sanitary Engineer A. W. Fuchs and Assistant Public Health Engineer L. H. Male will assist in the milk survey. Male will specialize in field work and will visit a number of the outlying dairy farms to inspect conditions there.

Philip Broughton will handle the general health education survey and look into the existing facilities and make suggestions for improvement of the system of health education.

Dr. Olesen expects to study the problem of such preventive diseases as diphtheria, scarlet fever, etc.

Other important items included in the 14-point program, but for which experts have not yet been assigned, are slums areas, school health and dental hygiene, dog pound, laboratory conditions in the Department of Health and prevention of mosquito plagues.

The Health Department laboratory, charged with analysis of milk and water, etc., will receive a most careful study, Dr. Olesen said. The question of mosquitoes, he added, will be attacked from a pest standpoint, as there are practically no malaria germs in this area. Grounds surrounding the White House, Dr. Olesen said, are the most heavily infested with mosquitoes.

Established in 1901, the Bureau of Standards held its first open house and exhibition November 21, 1907, just 30 years ago. Last night the bureau held a preview for families of employes of its 1937 exhibition which opens tonight. Bureau officials called attention to the fact that more than one-third of the 1907 scientific staff is still in service; more than 1,400 employes work there now. At left, Frederick Knoop, instrument maker, shows Mrs. George Steinacker, of 3446 Connecticut avenue, a diamond used to rule standard lines and scales. Right, F. A. Eugler, expert in glass blowing, shows how it's done under modern methods.

Rapid Growth Of Children's Hospital Cited

Jump From 94 Patients to 6,000 in 67 Years Told at Board Meeting.

The remarkable growth of Children's Hospital in the 67 years of its existence was discussed at the hospital's annual board meeting yesterday by Dr. Joseph S. Wall, noted pediatrician on the hospital's medical staff. "In 1870 the hospital treated 94 ward patients; this year we handled 6,000," he said.

He pointed out the even greater increase in dispensary cases. Nearly 70,000 children received treatment in the hospital dispensary last year, as against 280 the year the institution was founded. The cases handled by the 106 dispensary physicians ranged from "allergy to X-ray," he added.

With its child-welfare department, facilities for study of childhood diseases, dispensary, wards and nurses' school Children's Hospital is safe from the "infringement of socialized medicine," Dr. Wall believes. "We've just made a better mouse trap," he concluded.

The officers stressed the financial problem facing the hospital. Its deficit is over $18,000, chiefly as the result of the Community Chest's failure to reach its goal during the last two years. Bequests have totaled $7,493, President Charles D. Drayton reported.

According to Drayton, chairman of the ways and means committee, one solution to the problem would be for the Government to increase the $2.48 daily payment it makes for each needy patient. Each case actually costs $4.84 a day, he pointed out.

Prof. Harold Laski, of the London School of Economics, will be guest lecturer at George Washington University during the first two weeks of April, 1938, President Cloyd H. Marvin announced yesterday.

The English political scientist will conduct a round-table conference at the School of Government on "America and the Future of Democracy." He will consider four sides of the subject: Economic, governmental reorganization, the international situation and the future of liberal culture.

He will also deliver two series of lectures. One, open to the public, will be on "The Future of Federalism in the United States." The other, open only to George Washington students, will be on "The Nature of the Modern State."

Prof. Laski is well-known as a practical politician and as an author. He is a member of the central executive committee of the British Labor Party and has written several books on government analysis.

Two Runaway College Boys, 18, Caught Here on Way to Miami

Detectives Laugh in Relays as They Question Holy Cross Students Who Made Up Amnesia Story and Headed South.

It seemed like a very fine idea indeed up in Worcester, Mass., and it was good enough to throw the police of a half-dozen States into fits but last night at Washington Police Headquarters much of its glamor paled.

Alexander Walsh, 18, of Newport, R. I., and William M. Sexton, 18, of Utica, N. Y., thought it up. Both are students at Holy Cross College at Worcester.

Sexton went to a "sort of college doctor," explained he had fallen down and his head hurt. So the doctor gave him a couple of pills of which he thought so little he was still carrying them externally last night. Then he and Walsh took their roommates into their confidence.

Walsh wrote a note explaining that Sexton had hurt his head, was suffering amnesia, and had packed his bags and left. Walsh, his note explained, was going after Sexton to see that he came to no harm while wandering about without any memory. Then both left in a very large automobile which Sexton's father had lent him for use in college. Their destination was Miami.

In Newark, N. J., they spent Sunday night and sent a telegram to the dean of discipline at Holy Cross. That touched off the fireworks. In practically no time the dean had got in touch with papa Sexton, who got in touch with police. If young Sexton could have heard the lookout broadcast for them.

Reaching here late yesterday they called on young Walsh's uncle, Philip O'Hanney of 1441 Spring road northwest. From his home they called Sexton's father in Utica and Sexton, Senior, asked Utica police to have the boys taken into custody here.

Up to this point the story is mostly theirs as related solo and in duet, with great earnestness, to Washington police last night. They were questioned by relays of detectives, one set relieving another so they could go outside and laugh.

Then questioning was postponed for a time when the boys spied an open telephone box on the desk of Lieut. Clarence Talley and dropped all other interests while they examined its mechanism and all but took it apart. When a photographer essayed to take their picture they became most coy and Uncle Phillip drove off the photographers with belligerent gestures.

They were booked at headquarters as fugitives from their parents and released in the custody of O'Hanney.

Their only worry last night was what would happen when they got back to Holy Cross. They alluded sadly to the dean of discipline.

"He's a swell guy," they agreed, "but he's tough as hell."

Romantic Dreams Short-Cut To Asylum, Sociologist Says

Efforts to find romance through day dreams provide a short cut to the insane asylum, Dr. Paul Popenoe director of the Los Angeles Institute of Family Relations, warned yesterday in a lecture to high school students arranged by the Washington Council of Social Agencies.

"The day dream type of romance is a delusion and the stuff trouble is made of," he said. "When this attitude bumps up against the realities of marriage the shock is too great."

Dr. Popenoe advised his audience to regard romance as "a deeper and richer way of life." For this sort of romance, he said, marriage provides the greatest possible opportunity.

Of the million couples who annually get married in the United States, he said, about one-quarter are destined to be disappointed. "Part of this failure is the failure of the three great educational agencies, the home, the church and the school, to give young people proper preparation for marriage," he said.

"The attitude of young people is founded too much on the funny papers, the gags of radio comedians, the movies, and the stories of broken marriages told in the headlines of newspapers. Young people have learned to be cynical about marriage. An attitude of cynicism or defeatism is fatal to any marriage."

Just as important as bringing the proper attitude to marriage, Dr. popenoe said, is finding the right mate, and knowing a certain minimum of necessary technical information.

The proper choice of mate is not a question of luck or fate, he said. "Wide acquaintance with members of the opposite sex is necessary before a wise choice can be made. Any person could probably find several thousand satisfactory mates."

"Partly an educational problem, the break-up of the family must, in addition, be checked through redistribution of income," he stated. "To the middle class family, with relatively fixed income, every child they have means an income cut of about 15 per cent.

Marvin Blocks Syphilis Tests At G. W. Today

Wasserman tests, scheduled to be given to George Washington University students today as part of a campaign to control the menace of syphilis, will not be made because of objections voiced by Cloyd H. Marvin, president of the university; Howard Ennes, editor of the student paper, said last night.

Ennes said President Marvin had objected on the grounds that "such action would be against the regulations of the board of trustees and might force an investigation by the office of the United States Attorney General."

Arrangements had been made with the Health Department to examine the specimens and Dr. William Creswell, of the university hospital, had agreed to supervise the work, Ennes said, when Marvin interfered.

Students Blamed.

"I disapproved of the tests," President Marvin said last night, "because the students had gone off half-cocked and planned to have fourth year medical students perform the tests."

"I would not be opposed to the tests if they were performed by some competent and registered physician. Students of the university are entitled to Wasserman tests any time they please under the school's health administration system," Marvin said.

In explaining his reference to a possible investigation by the office of the Attorney General, Marvin said the charter of the university provided that any action taken by the school was subject to review and investigation by the Attorney General's office.

Doctors Approve.

Informed last night of Marvin's position in the matter, Ennes said the tests could have been performed as scheduled if he had known how Marvin felt.

"All Mr. Marvin told me," Ennes said, "was that it was against the board's regulations and might cause an investigation."

Students at the university attracted wide attention a month ago when they set up displays illustrating facts about syphilis in the school building and published articles on the digease in the school paper.

The campaign was given wholehearted support by medical leaders.

Pupils' Traffic Guide Falls Victim of Auto

William S. Welsh, 42, Rockville, Md., a special deputy assigned by the Montgomery County School Board to assist students of the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School across the East-West Highway, was struck by an automobile yesterday while on duty in front of the school. He was treated at Georgetown Hospital for cuts and bruises.

Police said the automobile was driven by Vincent Clagett, 36, Kensington, Md.

1,800 in D. C. Fail to Claim Their Pension

Problem of Security Act Discussed for Central Labor Union.

Payoff of benefits under the social security act is growing into a major administration problem, Ralph B. Harris, manager of the Washington Social Security Field Office, said last night in a meeting of the Central Labor Union at Typographical Temple.

Harris said that less than 20 per cent of more than 2,200 persons in the Washington area who have become eligible for old-age benefits during the last year have filed application for the money due them.

Harris asked co-operation of the union in distributing bulletins explaining the technique of filing claims for benefits and outlining the groups eligible for benefits.

Although monthly payments under the act are not scheduled to begin until 1942, lump sum payments are due workers who have reached 65 since the first of this year, in employment covered by the act, and to the relatives of such workers who have died since the first of the year before reaching 65.

Through November 26 payments to 305 persons averaging $22.22 were made in the Washington area, which included seven counties in Virginia and five in Maryland, beside the District.

Harris would not estimate the cash total still due the 1,800 persons who have failed to claim their benefits. Headquarters for the Washington area are in the Bond Building at New York avenue and Fifteenth street northwest. Forms for filing claims are at the office.

Collins Inspects Reformatory and Lauds Huff Work

Approval of the administration of the District reformatory and workhouse by the new general superintendent of penal institutions, Ray L. Huff, was expressed yesterday by Chairman Collins, of the House subcommittee on District appropriations following a surprise visit there yesterday.

Collins said there was "no question" new reformatory buildings are needed.

Huff told Collins that substantial savings in operating costs were being made in comparison with previous years. He also called attention to the need for better quarters for women inmates.

The subcommittee is understood to be favorably inclined to the proposal of the Metropolitan Police Department and the Commissioners to reopen the Second police precinct following a visit to the precinct station, now occupied by the Woman's Bureau, Saturday.

Hearings on the 1939 District budget were again postponed yesterday by Collins because of a delay in transmitting the budget from the Budget Bureau. The hearing now is tentatively scheduled to begin next Monday.

Today the subcommittee will renew its inspection of municipal institutions and proposed capital improvements.

Dupont Body Votes, 58 - 2, For Tunnel

Citizens Indorse Report of Committee for Circle Underpass.

Indorsing by 58-2 the report of its executive committee on the proposed Dupont circle underpass, the Dupont Circle Citizens Association yesterday furnished further proof of public support behind the project.

The underpass, which would carry Connecticut avenue street cars and through motor traffic below Dupont circle, was credited in the report with the following major advantages: Free flow of traffic on Connecticut and Massachusetts avenues; return to Connecticut and Massachusetts avenues of buses and automobiles now routed along nearby residential streets; and greater safety for pedestrians at the circle.

Conceding certain disadvantages attached to the underpass, the report summarized other proposed solutions and characterized them as unsatisfactory.

Favored By Van Duzer.

"If properly and artistically constructed and well maintained, the underpass will result in improved conditions at Dupont circle and the betterment of this area and this association," the report concluded.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, and William A. Van Duzer, director of traffic, spoke at the meeting in behalf of the project.

Explaining that the cost of constructing the $480,000 underpass would be met from regular highway department appropriations, Capt. Whitehurst said the plan did not contemplate any increase in the gasoline tax or special assessment on property on or near the circle.

All-Night Parking Ban Asked.

Another resolution adopted by the association expressed the hope that "in the not-too-distant future" all-night parking would be ruled illegal.

The association also called for an ordinance forbidding the sounding of horns between midnight and 7 a. m. and, in another motion, called attention to the common use of horns for purposes other than traffic safety.

P. U. C. Witnesses Asked.

The Kenilworth Citizens Association voted to ask members of its public utilities committee to appear at the Congressional hearing on the transit situation instead of demanding a rehearing of the Capital Transit Co. evaluation case before the Public Utilities Commission.

Adopting an unusual resolution introduced by Mrs. Charles Adams Baker, the Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown voted to recommend to the Commissioners that owners of residential property be given the privilege of paying a tax to the District Government for exclusive parking rights in front of their homes. The association celebrated its eleventh anniversary.

Speaking before both the Manor Park and the Takoma Park, D. C., Citizens Associations, Riley Elgen, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, declared that Washington enjoys lower electric light, gas and telephone rates than most cities of comparable size.

Track Removal Sought.

The Takoma Park association voted to ask for removal of old street car tracks on Laurel and Aspen streets and requested that plans be prepared for widening the Aspen street underpass under the B. & O. Railroad tracks. The pass is said to be too narrow to allow easy passage of buses.

The Manor Park group asked for an addition to the Whittier elementary school and completed plans for a joint Christmas celebration with the Takoma Park Association December 21 at the Takoma Park playground.

Plans for extensive Christmas festivities were begun at the meeting of the Michigan Park Citizens Association. The committee in charge is headed by John T. Hillyard and Joseph Parkhill.

The Forest Hills Citizens Association indorsed a resolution asking preservation of Decatur House. It was announced that the association's annual dinner will be held at Columbia Country Club on January 25.

Stars Undergo Quaint Agonies Before Lenses

Hair Brushes and Spears Cause Odd Discomfort To Davis and Flynn.

By Frederick C. Othman.

That stopped the works on "Jezebel," because how is a glamour girl going to be glamorous when her face is shrouded in bandages?

The trouble seemed to be that Miss Davis was playing the part of a mid-Victorian debutante a couple of weeks ago and got too enthusiastic. The script called for her to be at her dressing table, preparing for a dance.

No nice girl wore rouge in New Orleans in 1850. They made their cheeks red by patting them with the bristle side of a hair brush. Miss Davis therefore patted her cheek with the bristles, and patted it, and patted it, before Director William Wyler was satisfied. By then her face began to swell. She looked as if she had a toothache.

She apparently recovered in the next day or two and resumed her tear-stained romancing with Henry Fonda, the Southern swain who jilted his fiancee because she wore a red dress to a dance. (It developed that Southern debutantes in the last century wore nothing but white when they went waltzing).

Miss Davis had forgotten about the hairbrush episode, when her cheek began to swell again. The doctors discovered that she was suffering from a slight infection, nothing serious, but enough to keep her away from the cameras. They said she ought to be as lovely as ever by tomorrow.

Chicken and Spears.

Around the corner from the "Jezebel" set, Errol Flynn was risking something more than a cheek infection in the Technicolor production of "Robin Hood." He looked plenty scared when the spear missed his face by a hair, but he didn't even get scratched.

The scene was the banquet in the castle of Prince John. The hall was 300 feet long and 200 feet wide, while the stone walls were 40 feet high and a whole ox roasted at a fireplace in the corner.

Medieval courtiers were eating roasted joints of beef nad prune pies (all real), while Flynn—dressed as Robin Hood in green—munched chicken as he argued with the prince, impersonated by Claude Rains.

Flynn had been eating chicken legs for three days straight, and he was getting tired of it. While the cameras turned he chewed it hungrily; when they stopped he removed it from his mouth and deposited it in a pewter beer tankard.

The story called for the prince to have an assistant try to send a spear through the back of Flynn's chair into his heart during the meal.

Flynn fingered the sharp steel point of his weapon and looked questioningly at Director Michael Curtiz, but the latter said:

A Close Shave.

Looking distinctly uneasy, Flynn did just that, while a prop man hacked a hole in the back of the chair to make sure the spear would penetrate it. Then Steve Clemente, the celebrated Indian knife thrower, took the weapon and aimed it at the hole.

There was a crash—and glistening steel emerged under Flynn's left ear. He wasn't touched, but he looked mighty unhappy. He was so unnerved, in fact, that he actually swallowed a bite of chicken, something that he'd sworn he'd never do again, so long as he lived.

In thirteenth century England, according to the Warner Brothers Research, banqueteers used whole pepper seeds on their tables, and rock salt to season their food. We tried a taste of both, to our ever lasting regret, but we can report that all pepper and salt used in this $2,000,000 production is the McCoy.

Trailer Barbecue For Film Troupe

Allan Jones just couldn't wait to try out his trailer stove during a location trip, so he gave a barbecue feast for the "Everybody Sing" company. The singer did the cooking in his trailer outside the sound stage.

Hal Le Sueur, Joan Crawford's brother and member of the cast, and Eddie Cronenweth, still photographer, arrived on the stage with venison steaks, the result of a hunting trip in the Saw Buck mountains.

They gave the steaks to Jones, who had them dressed in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer commissary, and then the actor cooked them during the noon hour.

Among those attending the "trailer warming" were Judy Garland, Director Edwin L. Marin, Fanny Brice and Reginald Owen.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

John Boles and Luli Deste Throw Dignity to Winds And Go Frantically Balmy in 'She Married an Artist'

Columbia Comes to Bat With Another Farce of Better Sort Stressing Insanity of Love; 'To Be Continued' Wasn't; Color Photography Goes Off Deep End in 'Ebb Tide;' an Oversight Corrected; Theater Notes.

COLUMBIA Pictures, still exhilarated, no doubt, by the "shot in the arm" given the idea by "The Awful Truth," is bearing down on the comedy note like all get out.

Grace Moore's last picture, "I'll Take Romance," was more musical comedy than opera, or even operetta, and this buisness of "She Married an Artist," unwound in the Warner projection room yesterday afternoon, is another item in which high-pressure fun—leavened with a basic idea of rather more substantial fiber than most farces can boast—is the main objective.

BELL.

Being wed to an artist, as the lines of the play unhesitatingly proclaim, is the approximate equivalent of marrying into an insane asylum. The developments of the story make this doubly clear. Magazine illustrators and costume designers, it seems like geniuses and halfwits, are a distinct species. When two of them decide to resume a Parisian romance after five years, harassed by publishers' deadlines and the fashion parades of the ateliers, the consequences are about as soothing as a May Day riot.

This is the sort of thing that must gallop ahead at breakneck speed for best effect. That is the way "She Married an Artist" gallops ahead. The pace is fast and furious and is remarkably well sustained.

The surprise of the picture, I should say, is the revelation that John Boles, one of the most charming gentlemen in Hollywood, is able, on occasion, to shake off his accustomed dignity and romp around in a dirty shirt—if any at all—and have himself a romantic and hectic time. One suspects that this was an entirely new experience for John and it certainly will be for his public when the picture is seen on the screen at the Earle, beginning Friday.

Luli Deste is another pleasant disclosure. Miss Deste is a handsome young woman with just a trace of French accent, who, to many, will vaguely recall the screen eminence of Corinne Griffith, the present Mrs. George Preston Marshall, of Washington. There is a haunting resemblance between the two.

And the venerable Guild pioneer, Helen Westley, goes in for slangy comedy in a large and disarming way in this subject, too. Miss Westley is the presiding "Patsy" of Mr. Boles' disordered establishment and bears the brunt of all the amorous adventures of her boss—and they are pu-len-ty!

Produced in the gold-plated manner, "She Married an Artist" rates high in pictorial elegance and has been photographed artistically by a cameraman who must have been run dizzy by the swooping about of his camera crane as it chased the cyclonic action up and downstairs and all over the place.

Miss Ehlen, The Post's expert stylist, tells me the gowns worn by the gals in the picture are practically hot stuff. I wouldn't know about that.

"Amaco," Martin Flavin's drama in seven episodes, depicting present-day class struggle, will be presented by the Mask and Bauble Club of Georgetown University at Gaston Hall, on Wednesday evening, December 15, under the direction of Arthur Behrens. In the training given members of the Mask and Bauble, it is interesting to note, ideals of the old stage of Booth and Drew are insisted upon rather than the suppressed and, the directorate believes, often ineffective acting of the modern sophisticated theater. The organization functions under the general direction of the faculty moderator, the Rev. Ferdinand Schoberg, S. J. In "Amaco," the principal role will be played by Thomas Mullahey.

Mr. F. Cowles Strickland, director of the Washington Civic Theater, is sorely irked, I regret to say, because in announcing the circumstances surrounding the cancellation of supposedly current December plays at the National, in yesterday's column, attention was not directed to the fact that his organization will step heroically into the breach with Andre Obey's "Noah" during the period of E street's darkness.

Mr. Strickland inquires by letter if I have forgotten a surprising number of things concerning this play—among them that while London, Paris and New York all have reveled in its many superiorities, it never before has been presented in Washington—and by some miracle I have not forgotten any of them.

What I DID forget was that in emergencies of this kind it is the Civic that supplies the Maurice Evanses, Katharine Cornells, Ethel Barrymores, Joan Bennets, et al.

Sorry.

It is never a pleasant duty to have to condemn a new play as totally unworthy of the attention of discriminating theatergoers, but occasionally one comes along that leaves the reviewer no alternative. "To Be Continued," recently at the National, was one such. Flying the face of Providence, the producers took the piece directly into New York from the Washington engagement under the new title of "Love in My Fashion," opened it last Friday night and closed it Saturday. It now reposes, one presumes, in Cain's warehouse, the Sargasson Sea of lost slips, as you might say. The experience of Dorothy Bernard, former Washington stock favorite, in this ill-judged effort was especially harrowing. Her Thanksgiving Day present was to be dropped from the cast to make way for another actress deemed more suitable for her part. After one rehearsal, the other actress was dropped from the cast to make way for Miss Bernard. It might have been better if the original notice of dismissal had been permitted to stand—not for the play, but for Miss Bernard, who was considerably better than her role.

On Friday night of this week, in the auditorium of the National Press Club at 8:15 by the chronometer, an "Evening in Magic" will be presented as the annual entertainment produced each year in December by the local assembly of the Society of American Magicians.

This program will be under the direction of Charles W. Townsley, general chairman, and will be participated in by Commander C. C. Slayton, Arch McDonald, Art Godfrey, Harry H. Baker, master of ceremonies and one of the cleverest of the resident masters of hocus-pocus; Theodore T. Golden, Fred H. Untiedt, Edward Cross, Raymond E. Otterback, Carl E. Brockway and Herman S. Cole, the chairman of the committee on arrangements.

This will be the fifth celebration of this event by the Press Club. It may safely be predicted that it will be the best of them all.

Natural color photograph is hitting a pace of scientific and technical advancement comparable to the speed with which sound was developed on the screen, once it was accepted as an inevitable adjunct to motion picture production and really got going. In "Vogues of 1938," Walter Wanger demonstrated many new uses to which the Technicolor cameras could be put to achieve an entirely new note in realistic effect. In "Ebb Tide," this perfected three-tone process is subjected to further and more exacting tests by being taken out to sea for the first time. The newly contrived mobility of the Technicolor cameras makes possible this new departure in color technique. Set in the South Seas and based on a Robert Louis Stevenson story, "Ebb Tide" is eagerly awaited as an evidence of scientific progress as well as a fascinating entertainment. There will be more of this later, after the preview screening scheduled for this afternoon at 1:30.

"The Deluge," played on Broadway by Edward G. Robinson and Pauline Lord, will be presented in the Jewish Community Center Auditorium on Wednesday and Thursday of next week, December 15 and 16, by the center's acting group.

This Frank Allen drama is a pretentious undertaking for any non-professional organization and will be acted by a cast that will include Dena Lindeman, Hy. Orling, Paul Lane, Sam S. Schor, Joseph Engler, Marvin Kaplon and others. It will be directed by Bernard H. Fischgrund.

Although no mention has been made of the fact here of late, "Stage Door," the film version of the George S. Kaufman-Edna Ferber stage play, is sailing along to top business at RKO-Keith's, with Katharine Hepburn, Ginger Rogers and Adolphe Menjou in the pivotal roles, ably seconded by Andrea Leeds, Lucille Ball, Constance Collier and a long and capable cast. The present outlook is that it will run on Fifteenth street until Christmas—or thereabouts. It is so much better than the stage play that no one should let it get away, as the saying is.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Dec. 6.—The more I see of Hollywood, the more I am convinced that an actor needs, most of all, to be a dyed-in-the-wool gambler. Acting for the screen is the most uncertain game of chance ever devised. One good break and the man who is a nobody today can become a famous star tomorrow; one bad break and today's favorite, overnight sinks out of sight.

CLARK GABLE.

There are 18,000 extras registered with the various casting agencies. Not more than 30 of them are making a decent living; the rest, playing a nip-and-tuck game with starvation, are willing to go on indefinitely in the hope that the Hollywood wheel of fortune will stop on their number "someday." Talk to the average extra, point out the odds against him—and he invariably answers your logic by citing the fact that Janet Gaynor, Clark Gable, Bill Boyd and Tyrone Power were once extras. They had a lucky break and became stars—what luck can do for one extra it can do for another. You have to admire the extra's courage, no matter what you think of his common sense.

• • • •

"Tomorrow"—that is the word that is always present in the conversation of Hollywood's would-be's. "Tomorrow I may get a call" . . . "tomorrow the director may notice me" . . . "tomorrow something — anything may happen." Take out that word from Hollywood's vocabulary, and the suicide rate would be appalling.

• • • •

Most screen stars are inconsistent and Katharine Hepburn, it seems, is not an exception to the general rule. I have interviewed the lady at least a dozen times and, invariably, she has bewailed the fact that the screen actress must struggle along without the stimulation of a visible audience. Today, outside the stage where she is working, I encountered two very red-faced newspaper men. They had just been given the bum's rush off Katty's set. The girl who "misses an audience" had spied them as they stood quietly on the sidelines, stopped work in the middle of a scene and loudly announced that she could not work while "those people" were staring at her!

• • • •

Every month, in Hollywood, tons of "still" photographs find their way into waste baskets. Studios turn them out in wholesale lots, often shooting, during the production of a single picture, as many as four or five hundred negatives from which thousands of prints are made. Off-hand, it would seem that old-time stills would be a drug on the market. The fact is that they are as scarce as hen's teeth and very valuable.

• • • •

The same small residence has furnished exterior scenes for each of the Jones Family pictures. It is located in the downtown district of Los Angeles, at least 15 miles from the Twentieth Century Studios and because of its inconvenience Darryl Zanuck decided, the other day, to have it duplicated, board for board, on the studio lot. The studio's construction department compared plans and submitted a cost sheet. The house would cost $32,000. Zanuck blew up. "I happen to know that the original house only cost $8,000," he stormed. The construction boss laughed. "Mr. Zanuck," he said, "the master craftsmen who are able to do studio work do not work for ordinary carpenters' wages." So—the Jones Family will continue to shoot exteriors in downtown Los Angeles.

Edmund Grainger Picture Is Big Hit

Once again Hollywood has surprised itself by having one of the smaller pictures turn out to be an unexpected hit!

The production in this case is Universal's clever romantic drama, "Prescription for Romance," in which Mischa Auer, Wendy Barrie, Kent Taylor, Dorothea Kent and Frank Jenks ring up performances that rank among their finest.

Although Producer Edmund Grainger was so impressed with the qaulity of the picture during production that he secured permission of Charles R. Rogers, executive vice president in charge of production, to incerase the film's budget by $50,000 for special scenes, no one was prepared for the tremendous enthusiasm of the sneak preview audience which hailed the picture as one of the most entertaining in months.

Described in the Hollywood jargon as a "sleeper," a low budget picture which clicks with the public, the production promises to rank in entertainment value with "Three Smart Girls," another "small" picture which made box office history.

Afraid of Self.

Charles Bickford, currently appearing in "Daughter of Shanghai," with Anna May Wong, has never seen himself on the screen since he saw "Dynamite," his first motion picture.

Fatted Calf.

Because she broke her ankle some years ago, Miriam Hopkins, blonde star of "Women Have a Way," learned to dance to strengthen her leg muscles, thus cultivating a taste for the theater.

Oswald to Marry Dolores Downey

"Oh, Yeah! I'm going to get married!"

'Oswald," whose real name is Tony Labrola, broke the news of his engagement before a group of theatrical friends joining him in a late supper following his radio broadcast with Ken Murray.

"I've been in love with Dolores ever since we first met," grinned "Oswald," who has just finished work in the musical picture "You're a Sweetheart."

Miss Downey said that her affection for the young comedian began when she heard him say, "Oh Yeah" over the radio.

French Star's Fan Mail Huge

Every Hollywood barometer for screen popularity has been shattered by Danielle Darrieux, sensational French star, now in America to appear in "The Rage of Paris."

Although she has not yet begun work on her first screen role in this country, the European film idol's fan mail already is heavy.

Thousands of letters have poured into Universal studios from French folk living in this country, Canada and even Europe. An equal number of enthusiastic letters have arrived from American theater-goers, eager to have a photograph of the vivacious actress who has fired the imagination of the cinema world.

HARRY RAPF, the Hollywood producer, was having some difficulty in finding a suitable ending for a picture he's making. He summoned one of his scenarists and exploded: "What am I paying you for? For two weeks you know we need an ending for the picture, and you haven't given me one suggestion. Last night I lay awake all night, and finally I myself thought of an ending" . . . Really?" asked the writer eagerly, "what was it?" . . . "I don't want to tell you," Rapf replied, "—because it stinks!"

ARRANGEMENTS finally have been completed for Eddy Duchin to play at the White House reception, December 30, in honor of John Roosevelt and his fiancee . . . The publication of "The Social Calendar," which will list all blue-blood events of the season, has been postponed for a year. Reason: While the blue bloods contributed enough events to fill the book, the common advertisers didn't come through with enough ads.

Big Pictures Now Built on Great Stories

Hollywood, wrestling currently with the most impressive list of big and costly productions in its history, is proving today in spectacular fashion that the story's the thing.

Producers juggling million-dollar budgets have ceased attempting to outshine one another with lavish sets and multitudes of extras, and are insisting instead that their big pictures have strong dramatic story value.

Outstanding example of the current trend to build the big pictures on powerful story forces in which big sets and milling mobs become simply factors in the play is "Wells Fargo," which Producer-Director Frank Lloyd is making for Paramount. This epic, costing a million and a half, unfolds the exciting story of American transportation, its heroes and frontiers. There are big sets, big scenes, but because Lloyd is emphasizing the gripping story of his subject the picture is hailed as the greatest the director of "Cavalcade" and "Mutiny on the Bounty" has produced.

In "The Buccaneer," Cecil B. DeMille also has chosen a powerful story as the vehicle for his current picture. Through Fredric March, the co-star with Franciska Gaal, he has depicted the colorful story of Jean Lafitte, the notorious pirate, credited by historians with helping the Americans to victory in the Battle of New Orleans during the War of 1812.

In "Ebb Tide," first Technicolor picture of the sea, Producer Lucien Hubbard turned to the master storyteller, Robert Louis Stevenson, for his screenplay and fashioned a tremendous drama of adventure in the South Pacific.

"Conquest," M-G-M's big picture of the moment, deals with a story from the career of Napoleon; the classic story of "Robin Hood" is the basis for an important Warner Bros. picture just completed; Twentieth Century-Fox chose the punchy drama of Chicago's history for a big production, while at United Artists the story of "Marco Polo" has been transferred to film.

Move to Tax Capital Denied By Morgenthau

Order for Rich to State Assets Is to Aid Present Levies, He Says.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau yesterday asserted the decision of the Internal Revenue Bureau to require all persons with an income of $100,000 or more annually to file a detailed sworn statement of their a ets and net worth was inspired only by a desire to make administration of existing tax laws more efficient and economical.

The bureau's order aroused apprehensions that the decision was inspired by serious consideration o: proposals to tax capital assets—which would be revolutionary for America. Morgenthau, however, insisted this was not the purpose.

The Secretary of the Treasury also gave assurances at his semi-weekly press conference that the information required of wealthy taxpayers would be kept confidential. He likewise held the bureau's order was in keeping with "both the spirit and the letter" of the existing Federal income tax laws. The Treasury has not previously required any return from taxpayers regarding their capital assets or net worth.

Detailed List Required.

The form to be filled out by persons with incomes of $100,000 or more calls on the taxpayer to list, at the beginning and end of the year, cash on hand, accounts and notes receivable, all securities, mortgages, real estate, residences, automobiles, yachts, other personal property, partnership interests, "joint ventures," syndicates, leases or leaseholds, business property not included elsewhere, and all other assets.

The form also requires a listing of the taxpayer's liabilities and a statement of "net worth" at the beginning and end of each year beginning with 1936. All assets are to be valued at cost.

Such information is exactly what would be needed if the Federal Government were to undertake taxation of capital assets. The information will give to the Treasury the first accurate data it has ever gathered regarding the details of the wealth of the country as distinguished from income of wealthy persons.

Saving Is Expected.

Morgenthau said the Treasury did not have sufficient information regarding taxpayers in the brackets from $100,000 up in arriving at a correct conclusion as to the amounts which such taxpayers should pay. He said the information would simplify for both the Government and the taxpayer the audit of returns. He pointed out in many instances both the Government and taxpayers have been put to considerable expense in the auditing of these returns.

"I believe that 99 per cent of the taxpayers affected by the order will cheerfully supply the information," the Secretary asserted.

Asked whether the Treasury was gathering the information to determine possibilities of a levy on capital assets, Secretary Morgenthau replied that "this order was inspired by a desire to increase the efficiency and reduce the cost of administering the existing tax laws" and for no other purpose.

Silent on Inquiry Publicity.

He said he doubted whether the Congressional investigation of income returns which took place on Capitol Hill last summer would have been necessary had the Treasury had the information it is now seeking.

Reminded that the Treasury in that investigation had not kept confidential the income returns of a number of taxpayers but made public these various items of information, and that some persons feared the Treasury might reveal information filed under the new order, Morgenthau was asked what he had to say as to that.

"I can only repeat," he asserted, "that the only reason for asking for this information is the reason I have given and no other—and that reason is in the interest of efficiency and economy."

Parks to Appear At Ryan Hearing

Morganton, N. C., Dec. 6 (AP).—Solicitor Gordon Boger said today Ned A. Parks, Morganton youth, would appear in court January 3 for a preliminary hearing on a warrant charging him with nonsupport of an illegitimate child born to the former Martha Barkley, who recently married Basil Ryan, member of a wealthy New York family.

The whereabouts of Parks was not disclosed. Existence of the charges against Parks became known after Miss Barkley and Ryan were married here November 4. Ryan later issued a statement saying he had no recollection of going through the ceremony. He is a patient in a hospital.

HELP 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

To Flush out Acids and Other Poisonous Waste

Doctors say your kidneys contain 15 Miles of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 2 pounds of waste.

Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning shows there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

An excess of acids or poisons in your blood, when due to functional kidney disorders, may be the beginning of nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 Miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

I. C. C. Refuses To Dismiss Rail Rate Increases

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission denied yesterday a six-State petition to dismiss further consideration of a request by railroads for a 15 per cent freight rate increase.

Commissioner Clyde B. Aitchison, in charge of the proceedings, announced the commission ruling after it had conferred this morning on the petition presented last week by State officials of North and South Dakota, Idaho, Nebraska, Utah and Montana, seeking dismissal of the carriers' application.

Ralph Budd, president of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway, was cross-examined at yesterday's session of the commission concerning a previous statement by him that adequate railroad credit, produced by the $517,000,000 the carriers are asking, would enable them to spend $900,000,000 annually for improved plant and equipment.

Budd asserted the roads should have sought a 20 per cent increase, observing this boost would give "no more" than a fair rate of return on property invested.

Commissioner Claude R. Porter questioned Budd on the roads' increased operating efficiency, saying the cost of moving one ton of freight 1,000 miles had declined from about $11 in 1921 to about $7 in 1935.

Budd argued increased efficiency was not sufficient to offset increased costs.

Would Investigate Counsel.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Truman (Democrat), of Missouri, recommended yesterday an inquiry by the New York and Chicago Bar associations into the conduct of attorneys for the receivers of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad and attorneys for New York bankers involved in the road's 1925 receivership.

Behrle on Trial For Perjury in Gang Shooting

Prisoner Accused of 'Forgetting' When Summoned as Witness.

Echoes of the gang-land shooting which crippled Joseph E. O'Brien for life were heard in District Court yesterday when Harry (Spike) Behrle, an alleged eye-witness to the shooting, went on trial before Justice Jesse C. Adkins on a perjury indictment.

Behrle is accused of having suffered a drastic loss of memory after the shooting and after he gave police a statement. He and two others, William R. (Country) Carpenter, and O'Brien were indicted for perjury when they failed to remember events as they were called to testify against the men subsequently convicted of shooting O'Brien.

Police said a hi-jacking had led to the sending of two or three carloads of members of the warring gang to the spot where Behrle, Carpenter and O'Brien were known to be. Joseph S. Bond, Samuel S. Montgomery, Clarence Ware, John Sweeney, George F. Tear and Charles R. (Rags) Warring were charged with having shot O'Brien several times as they jumped out of their automobiles in the 200 block of Second street southeast, December 6, 1936.

Air Chief Urges Fields to Meet Wartime Needs

Gen. Westover Suggests 45 Airports in Each of 9 Corps Areas.

Immediate development of air terminals to meet the wartime needs of the United States was urged yesterday by Maj. Gen. Oscar Westover, chief of the Army Air Corps, at a Department of Commerce conference on airport development.

A minimum of 45 landing fields would be needed in each of the nine corps areas o provide for warime requirements of the Army's air fleet, he said, adding that at present only 30 airports now in service meet maximum requirements.

The Army believes that air bases should have unobstructed paved runways 5,000 feet long and 200 feet wide, with lights and radio traffic control, Gen. Westover said.

116 Fields Available.

Pointing out that 116 fields could be developed readily to meet the Army's specifications, he indicated that 28 airports in operation could be used as auxiliry bases.

These fields, he declared, should have runways at least 3,000 feet long, and 100 feet wide.

Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, said, in stressing the need for airports capable of meeting the demands of larger craft, "I would prefer a 3,000 or 4,000 foot runway with safe approaches to one provided with 5,000 foot runways and approaches. Washington monuments and steeples won't go in the approaches to an airport."

Air-Consciousness Is Need.

In the opinion of Assistant Secretary of Commerce J. Monroe Johnson, however, the most-pressing problem of aviation is that of making the public air-minded.

"Less than 1 per cent of the people of the United States will set foot in a plane," he told his audience composed of representatives of Federal, State and local aviation officials and representatives of private organizations.

Clifford W. Ham, executive director of the American Municipal Association, asserted that the majority of the airports were operating at a loss.

1 Plea for Hearing Delays Renaming Judge McMahon

A public hearing on Judge John P. McMahon, re-nominated for the District police court, where he has presided for 20 years, was scheduled yesterday because of one request for the inquiry.

Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, set the hearing for 10:30 a. m. today because a New Jersey woman lawyer had requested it. Previously, he had said Judge McMahon would be reported favorably without a hearing.

The Senate Judiciary Committee meanwhile postponed action on the nominations of Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky, and Prof. Henry W. Edgerton, Cornell law teacher, to the United States Court of Appeals of the District because of the absence of Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada. McCarran left word that he wanted to be present when the committee voted.

Wallace Urges Plan to Boost Factory Output

Farmers and Labor Must Recognize Importance of Capital, He Says.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace in a radio speech here last night warned workers and farmers they "must realize the vital importance of capital to the general welfare," and proposed a seven-point economic program which he said would increase industrial production 40 per cent in three years.

"Today we are witnessing a refusal of capital to invest similar to that of several years ago," he said. "It may be that hazards to investment, real and imaginary, are so great that capital either will not or cannot come out of hiding and take the risks inherent in all investment.

"But if our system is to endure, business must take the Government's word that Government wishes it well and business must assume those responsibilities of leadership which business claims. Otherwise, Government will be forced to step into the breach."

Concerning the undivided profits tax, Wallace said "large industrial corporations should not be permitted to be turned into investment trusts merely to enable their owners to escape just taxation," but that it is possible debt-ridden small corporations and larger ones seeking to expand their plants should be relieved of "heavy taxation."

Wallace's "common sense" program to end the recession was:

1. "Revival of housing as outlined by the President.

2. "Revision of taxation policy to cure injustice but to maintain revenue.

3. "Maintenance of farm purchasing power and protection of the consumer by enacting a workable form of the ever-normal granary into law.

4. "Maintenance of the purchasing power of labor and therefore protection of markets for farm and industrial products by a sensible labor program.

5. "Assurance of an abundant supply of cheap credit and capital through a healthy securities market, to encourage increased output and employment.

6. "Provision of Government capital in case of need to carry the burden until such time as the use of private capital takes its place.

7. "Continuance of our careful, thoughtful approach to the revival of world peace and world trade by means of Secretary Hull's trade agreement program."

The Real Business Opportunities Are Snapped Up by Early Birds

That's why it pays to read the morning paper ads

—why morning Post Ads bring quick results!

Even though most people do take longer to buy a business than to rent a room or buy a used refrigerator or automobile—the EARLY BIRD principle still applies. The late-comer may find the opportunity gone. Men who want to buy or rent a business always try to be the first one on the spot.

Have you a business to sell? A barber shop or a beauty parlor? A cafeteria or a rooming house? A grocery or a parking lot? People looking for such opportunities turn to the "business opportunities" column in The Post FIRST. And for as little as 36 cents you can advertise your business opportunity in The Post. Post, Keith's Theater, Women's Church Council Unite to Give Alley Children A Merry Christmas

One Toy Will Be Price of Admission to Show on Saturday.

Workers Will Distribute Gifts Collected Among Alley Families.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

One Christmas toy will be the price of admission to a movie at 9 o'clock Saturday morning of this week at R. K. O. Keith's Theater — a toy to be given to some child of Washington's alley families that they all may know there is a Santa Claus.

Hardie Meakin, manager of R. K. O.-Keith's theater, is co-operating with The Washington Post in securing toys for the alley Christmas project of the Women's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches. Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, president of the council, yesterday opened a series of broadcasts over WJSV which will keep residents of the Capital in touch with preparations for the observance and acquaint those in other cities with what is being done here. Tomorrow and Friday at 4:10 p. m. others will follow.

"On Christmas Eve, at 5 o'clock, said Mrs. Linzel in her talk yesterday, "as the National Community Christmas tree is lighted by the President, 8,000 persons in 20 alleys in Washington will gather about their trees to sing carols and hear the Christmas story. The unique service is sponsored by the Women's Council of the Washington Federation of Churches in keeping with its general program of bringing the church and its message to the doorstep.

"Long before Christmas Eve, however, plans have been carefully laid and alleys assigned groups by the Juvenile Court worker of the council, Miss Etta Mai Russell. Each group visits the families in its alley, ascertains their needs. For each child a toy is secured, wrapped and carefully marked with his name. Because Christmas is a family time, this toy is left with the mother to be given when the family celebration is held Christmas morning. Christmas Eve is left entirely for the joining of hands in the Christmas service.

"The form of service will vary," said Mrs. Linzel, continuing her outline of the plan for her radio audience. "In some cases there will be a pageant; in others a choral program, but whatever form it may take, it will constitute a joint participation between sponsors and those in the alleys, and bring the spirit of Christmas to the latters' surroundings.

"It is difficult to know wherein lies the greater thrill—whether in seeing the joy of those receiving or the gracious response to our requests for co-operation. The Columbia Broadcasting Co., The Washington Post and Keith's Theater have united to make this project an overwhelming success. The Washington Post will receive toys for our children and, to this end, is sponsoring the toy show at Keith's Theater next Saturday moring at 9. The management is busily preparing an outstanding children's program to which the sole admission fee will be a new or well reconditioned toy. Beyond these invaluable aids, however, we are inviting the active co-operation of everyone interested."

Mrs. Linzel, in addition to pointing out how the boys and girls of the city could have a part in providing a merry Christmas for others and have a happy time themselves attending the morning movie, told of one of two of the groups already working directly in the alleys assigned to them, visiting the families to see how many grown-ups and children were there, and what they most needed. She told of one unit of young people under Mrs. Thomas J. Howerton, chairman of the juvenile court department of the council, which made a trip to its adopted alley on Sunday afternoon.

All of the toys—those collected Saturday at Keith's, where there will be facilities for receiving the hundreds which will be brought—and those contributed later will be assembled at Miss Russell's home, 1618 Eighteenth street, where the church workers will call for them December 22. Miss Russell has been in charge of a veritable toyland before . . . for she's the Toy Truck Lady of the summer alley program . . . so stepping over red fire-engines and scooters, dolls and jumping jacks, will be no inconvenience to her. It's all part of making a merry Christmas for the alley dwellers who call her "friend."

The Saturday movie party will be attended not only by children but by their parents and anyone else interested in participating in the alley Christmas plans.

D. A. R. to Carve Cathedral Lines

Names of the signers of the United States Constitution, carved in stone, will be presented to the National Cathedral by the District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution. The original plan called for a bronze plaque, to be placed in the crypt, but, after recommendation of Bishop James E. Freeman and the Cathedral trustees, the D. A. R. State executive committee, last night, decided to have the names incised into the fabric of the structure in the north transept, known as "the statesmen's transept."

The names will occupy a prominent place near the entrance, given by the women of America. Edwin M. Lewis, executive secretary of the Cathedral, in addressing the daughters said: "Bishop Freeman considers the memorial plaque to the men who chartered our Nation the most important tablet which will ever be placed."

The preliminary plan, drawn by the architect of the cathedral, was enthusiastically received by the daughters and subscriptions poured in, nearly completing the amount needed.

More than 500 bridge players gathered at the Wardman Park Hotel yesterday afternoon for the annual benefit party sponsored by St. Gertrude's Guild to aid St. Gertrude's School. Mrs. Robert Whitney Imbrie, president of the guild; Mrs. James Edward Duke, and a large committee on arrangements, were responsible for the success of the affair.

Miriam Haskell jewelry was given as table prizes and a cut steel ensemble was awarded to Mrs. Paul Maloney, wife of Representative Maloney, of Louisiana, winner of high score of the afternoon. Other prize winners were Mrs. Dennis Chavez, wife of Representative Chavez, of New Mexico, and Miss Mary Greeley, who made second and third high scores, and Mrs. James Gowan, who received the door prize.

'Flying Caravan' To Be Honored Here Saturday

Rep. O'Day Will Preside at Luncheon; Mr. Hull Also to Attend.

Representative Caroline O'Day will preside at a luncheon on Saturday at the Carlton Hotel in honor of the "Flying Caravan" of the Peoples Mandate Committee, at which the Secretary of State Cordell Hull and the Ambassador of Peru, Manuel de Freyre y Santander, will be guests of honor.

Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, wife of the Senator from Missouri, will entertain at her table a group of the "Gridiron Widows," among whom are expected Mrs. Lloyd Stark, wife of the Governor of Missouri. Also as Mrs. Clark's guest will be Miss Eleanor Connolly, who attended the Buenos Aires conferences of the Peoples Mandate Committee a year ago.

Two other prominent members of the "flying delegation" to the Buenos Aires conference, Mrs. Cecil Ira McReynolds, of Washington, and Mrs. Albert Lytle Deans, of New York, will have a group of distinguished guests at their table; Mrs. Carroll Miller, sister of Senator Guffey, will entertain guests for the luncheon; and coming down from New York for the occasion, will be Miss Vida Milholland, chairman of the New York City Committee of the Peoples Mandate and sister of Inez Milholland, of suffrage fame.

Reservations for the luncheon Saturday at 1:15 o'clock may be had from Miss Mabel Vernon, at the Hay-Adams House, director of the Peoples Mandate Committee for the Western Hemisphere.

Meeting Date Changed.

The Capitol Hill W. C. T. U. has changed the date of its meetings to the second Thursday of each month. The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Fernsner, 315 B street southeast, December 9 at 2 o'clock. Capital Hill is a "hold-fast union." It has made its educational quota and has paid all special funds.

Chiang's Aide Will Address News Women

Dr. Hu Shih, 'Youngest Sage,' to Talk Before Capital Press at Luncheon.

Dr. Hu Shih, Chinese statesman and adviser to Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, will address the Newspaper Women's Club Thursday at a luncheon to be given at the Admiral at 1 o'clock. Managing editors, chiefs of editorial staffs of Washington papers, heads of the press associations and foreign correspondents will be guests at the affair, which is the first such luncheon at which the newspaper women have entertained.

The affair will be one in a series of four or five luncheons planned this season honoring outstanding figures in world news, it has been announced by Ned Brunson Harris, the president. Mrs. Harris will preside at the luncheon and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, chairman of the distinguished guest committee of the club, will introduce the speaker. Mrs. Meyer knew Dr. Shih when both were students at Columbia University in New York, where he received his Ph. D. degree.

Dr. Shih is considered the leading scholar and statesman of China. Both friend and adviser to Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, he has encouraged the study of the Mandarin dialect throughout the nation, so when war news is broadcast it can be understood for the first time in almost every hamlet in the country.

He is revered for his wisdom, achievement and scholarship, and his tolerance and foresight in international aspects of the world problem have won him the title "The Youngest Sage."

Miss Margaret Hart is in charge of reservations for the luncheon which are to be made by this afternoon.

Jewish Home Unit Plans Dance Tomorrow Night

Final arrangements are being made for the dance to be given by the Washington Chapter of the National Home for Jewish Children tomorrow night at the Willard Hotel.

The committee in charge includes Mrs. David Tavan, Mrs. Al Blitz and Mrs. Betty April. The proceeds of the dance, aside from helping the Denver institution, aids in providing clothing for children of the Glenn Dale Sanatorium and for local underprivileged children.

Dance Set Wednesday By Hermoine Chapter

Hermoine Chapter, Daughters of Penelope, an auxiliary of the National Order of Ahepa, will hold its fourth annual dance at the Wardman Park Hotel, Wednesday, from 9:30 p. m. to 1 a. m.

Invitations have been sent to Demetrios Sicilianos, Minister from Greece; Nicholas Lely, secretary of the Greek Legation; Stephen Koundouriotis, Counselor, and Mrs. Koundouriotis; Speridon Tsami, Commercial Counselor, and to present and past supreme lodge officers of the Order of Ahepa and the Order of the Sons of Pericles and the officers of District Lodge No. 3 of the Daughters of Penelope.

G. W. U. Faculty Women Plan Christmas Music

The Faculty Women's Club of the George Washington University, of which Mrs. William C. Van Vleck is president, will meet at the home of Mrs. John A. Reed, 3309 Thirty-fifth street, on Friday afternoon, December 10, at 2:30 o'clock. The Newcomers group of the club will be in charge and will present a program of Christmas music.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

MISS JANET RICHARDS, a life member of the Women's City Club, will be guest of honor at its dinner tomorrow night and will give her annual talk on "Timely Topics of the Hour." Miss Richards, who is the dean of women lecturers on current events, has presented an annual program before the club for the past 14 years. The dinner at which she speaks is always one of the most popular of the season and more than 100 are expected to be present at this one.

Mrs. E. Richard Gasch will act as hostess and Mrs. Gladys B. Middlemiss, first vice president, who is acting president of the club during Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley's absence, will preside.

This afternoon, incidentally, at the regular book hour, there will be, in addition to the review of "The City of Bells," by Elizabeth Goudge, given by Elmira Reed Harris, one of the club members, a short program of Christmas music on the shepherd's pipes by Miss Margaret Lamble.

PLANS for the biennial convention of the League of American Pen Women and its annual spring breakfast, to take place April 23, at the Willard Hotel, were made yesterday at the meeting of the executive board for which Mrs. Phyllis Fergus Hoyt, national president, came from Chicago. Mrs. Hoyt was guest of honor at a luncheon at the Willard following the meeting and wore a becoming black velvet gown and hat with a corsage of mauve orchids.

* * * *

Tomorrow she will be a guest at the tea being given by the District branch of the league for Mrs. Roosevelt and hopes to be here long enough to be present at the Brook Fair, which the branch is having Friday and Saturday of this week.

Today the Pen Women will honor a visiting member of the national league, Belle Kinney, noted sculptor, at a luncheon at the Willard. She was also present at that given for Mrs. Hoyt yesterday.

Miss Kinney (in private life, Mrs. L. F. Scholz) worked with her husband on the bronze statue of Andrew Jackson which stands in the rotunda of the Capitol and the Sevier statue, representing Tennessee in Statuary Hall. Together, they also designed the reproduction of the Parthenon at Nashville.

HELEN SIEBOLD WALTER, of Staunton, Va., is here for the week, with her annual display of costume dolls at the Mayflower.

"Dolls are people to us," she said yesterday as I stood admiring them—and they were to me, too. For instance, there was the Dixie Doll, in a bridal gown of 1862, which she designed several years ago for Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, author of the quaint story bearing the title, "The Dixie Doll." There are the 1660 cavaliers with their white wigs and white satin outfits; those of 1640 in their bright red velvets; the group of Pilgrims—John Alden and Priscilla, Gov. Bradford and his wife, John Winslow and Mary Chilton—the lady of 1810 with her Bolivar hat and the belle of 1860 in her hoop skirts.

Miss Walter's first exhibition here was sponsored by the League for the Hard of Hearing, of which she is a member. When she gave up her teaching because of loss of hearing and sought another field in which to engage her talents, she found almost immediate success in dressing dolls in authentic colonial costumes. Her display here also includes imported costume dolls, but she never copies the clothes of these little visitors from foreign shores—she confines her work to American dolls and lets craftsmen of other nations make their own contribution of those of their countries to complete the 'round-the-world of toyland people.

THE FEDERAL CLUB is meeting tonight at the Roosevelt Hotel and if there isn't perfect weather for the meeting, its president probably will be afraid to attend—He's Dr. Willis R. Gregg, chief of the Weather Bureau. The club, whose members are administrators and technical advisers of Government departments, was formed when President Roosevelt was Secretary of the Navy and he is an honorary member.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Girl He Loves Is So Bashful She Begs Off Invitations; Is Tongue-Tied in Company; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 23 and go with a girl 19. I am very much in love with her. However, she has a negative personality problem similar to that of the 17-year-old girl you advised in your column of November 29. She is very sweet but does not wish to go anywhere near people. She is afraid they are looking at her. Whenever we go out, it is just for a ride. If I invite her anywhere, she begs me not to take her.

* * * *

I am working here in Washington and she lives in New York. Last week-end when I went to see her she didnt act very happy to see me, because I surprised her by seeing her in the afternoon when I wasn't expected. She only said two words and left the room, not because she was annoyed but because she was so bashful and thought because she wasn't dressed for company she couldn't face me.

* * * *

One evening while there I took her to my sister's home and all the time we was there she didn't say a word, just sat with her head down because she felt out of place. After seeing her act this way I had a talk with her and told her if she doesn't change, we will have to stop going out together.

* * * *

Miss Haworth, I love that girl and ever since I talked so frankly with her about her personality I am afraid she really will leave me. Do you think there is any way I can get her to mingle with people, and feel at home wherever she goes? Or do you think she will always be so bashful? I'd give the world to be able to change her attitude; but if she can't change I would have to give her up as I know I could never be happy—or she either—just living our lives together and not seeing anyone. Please advise me soon.

PEN.

DEAR PEN: If you really love the girl, don't be in such haste to make an issue of her painful timidity. By bluntly condemning her for it, instead of working tactfully to help her outgrow it, you are only making matters worse. What she needs, more than any other thing, is the stanch advocacy of one socially competent person of contemporary age who believes so implicitly in her potential capabilities that he is willing to make a long-term investment of effort in helping her vanquish her fears. It is up to you to lead the way, socially; to guide and support her trembling footsteps, and consistently to praise her frightened efforts.

On the occasion of your recent week-end visit, for instance, when she retreated in confusion because she felt herself improperly dressed for receiving a guest, you might have asked her afterward: "Gosh, Mary, why did you take the trouble to dress? You looked swell just the way you were. I never saw you without cosmetics before, and I must say it was a refreshing change from all those painted and powered faces I see in the office every day. You were a knock-out in that little house dress."

* * * *

I realize her conduct while visiting your sister's home was pretty trying. You might have said to her afterward: "Mary, when I take you out again, and you don't open your mouth all evening, I'm going to turn you over my knee and give you a sound smacking. You're old enough to know better than to act like that. You're a smart girl and you know it. I'm not going to have you acting like a dumbell. I'm going to make you talk in company if I have to choke the words out of you. Sometimes I think you're just plain lazy, you little fake." Get her to laughing at herself, if you possibly can. That's much better than making her feel only guilty, ashamed and completely impossible even in the eyes of one who loves her.

* * * *

This type of person needs to be brought out of her shell with positive, rather than negative, inducements. To threaten her with the loss of your love and companionship unless she reforms is to bring negative pressure to bear. It adds to her burden of fear, confusion and sense of defeat. It makes it the more difficult for her to be normally unself-conscious. If, on the contrary, she feels that you know how charming, interesting, vivacious and intelligent she really is at the core of herself; and that you are eager to have her reveal this picture of her personality to others, she has some positive pattern of behavior to follow in her social relationships. She has a pronounced incentive to try to be to others the sort of person she finds it so easy to be with you.

* * * *

You must get the idea firmly fixed in her mind that she really is the sort of person you want her to be in company—sweet, wholesome, high spirited, stimulating; a girl who can be counted on to make a good impression, as regards appearance, conversation and agreeable behavior. Praise her sweetness, modesty, high spirits, stimulating mind; tell her constantly that she is a thousand times more attractive than the average girl who is so complacently sure of herself. You must make her feel that she is acting a silly role, completely foreign to her actual self, in hanging her head and backing away from social contacts like a bashful 4-year-old. Tell her such conduct is lazy, selfish, inconsiderate and non-cooperative; that it's a darn shame she won't work to do real justice to her gifts. Tell her it isn't that she hasn't got the goods, it's only that she isn't making use of it.

Since you've come away to Washington to work, she probably imagines you meeting all kinds of sophisticated sirens professionally and socially, and is more frightened than ever of her ability to hold your interest. Get this notion out of her mind. Tell her there isn't a girl in the world who can touch her, when she chooses to be herself.

Don't let her beg off invitations which would bring her into mixed company. Be masterful about it. Just say: "No alibis accepted. We're going." Then, by way of building up her self-confidence, you might suggest she wear that certain blue dress (or whatever color it is) that you like so well and she looks so sweet in; and do her hair that certain way you like so much; and to remember that Bill Blank, who is going to be there, is interested in football so be sure to talk to him about it; and Jane Johns thinks she's a ringer for Katharine Cornell, so be sure to remark about the resemblance—or any other conversational steers you can supply her—and drag her along oblivious to her every protest.

You should insist upon her mastering a few accomplishments—such as dancing to perfection; playing cards expertly; swimming and diving, or any other form of outdoor sports. Tell her that the art of conversation consists, simply, in asking a few intelligent questions, listening intently, and making an occasional encouraging remark apropos of what the other person is saying. You might give her a few books of a self-improving sort as a Christmas gift. The list might include Dr. Henry C. Link's "Return to Religion," which devotes a chapter to the value of social accomplishments in overcoming personality handicaps; Marjorie Barstow Greenbie's "Personality," which explains that personality is a surplus of physical vitality focused on certain definite social ends, and Florence Seabury's "Love Is a Challenge," which discusses the obligation to self-development we owe to ourselves, to those we love, and to those who love us.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

NOT ONE WOMAN in 100 knows how to wash her face properly! That is the observation of J. Howard Crum, who is a doctor and an authority on beauty, and who places the blame for most of our skin worries on this failure to thoroughly cleanse the face.

If you have a complexion complaint you will want to give more thought to this business of face washing, for it comes first in Dr. Crum's beauty prescription. Also, you must abandon any deep-rooted ideas that you must treat your skin gently, for this medical authority advises rough measures and persistence in their practice to produce a skin that is smooth textured and young.

Cold cream, of course, is indispensible, but so is the old-fashioned combination of soap and water, and you are encouraged to wash your face with soap and water at least once a day. Here is the way Dr. Crum advises you to do it: Begin with lukewarm water to relax the tissues of the face and neck. Do not at first use soap, but slap the warm water over the face and neck with the hands. As soon as the tissues feel very relaxed, let the hot water tap run until the water in the basin is as hot as you can tolerate it.

That's mild enough treatment, but there is more to come! You are now ready for the soap and the scrubbing. A washcloth will do for this purpose, but if you really want to change your skin you will use a pumice or complexion stone to stimulate the circulation and the growth of new cells. Dip the stone into the water and, after the face has been washed thoroughly once, lather it again and rub the lather very gently into the skin with the stone. Stop using the stone as soon as a faint blush appears on the skin. You should use the stone at night before retiring, and not oftener than every other night.

After you have scrubbed your face with the cloth or stone remove the lather and then, when it is free from the soap, change quickly to cold water and chill the tissues as quickly as possible. Dry the face with a rough towel.

As you can see, the underlying principle of this method is the stimulation of the circulation and unrelenting persistence in keeping the skin clean. There are no shortcuts to beauty, and this authority says so very frankly.

If you are willing to give your skin the time and care it deserves, however, you will be able to see a gradual but steady improvement. In a year's time you can work miracles.

Reducer's Mayonnaise.

2 egg yolks
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups mineral oil

Add the salt to the egg yolks, blend thoroughly. Add the lemon juice. Then add the oil in quantities of a tablespoon or more, being sure that all the oil has completely combined with the egg yolks before more is added. Continue beating all the time with rotary beater. Toward the last larger quantities of the oil may be added at a time. Have all ingredients cold. If a more acid dressing is desired, add more lemon juice or add the juice from sweet pickles.

Use purified mineral oil—heavy oil is best. This oil has no nutritive value and is also laxative.

England Makes Survey Of Its Historic Cottages

London, England is now undertaking a complete survey of all old cottages of historical or artistic interest, according to John L. Dowrick, manager of the American Express Travel Service, who reports that literally ten of thousands of buildings will be included in the project.

The survey is necessary because many of the buildings are below government housing standards and may therefore be demolished. Every effort will be made to recondition the picturesque old dwellings and make them habitable according to modern ideas of comfort and hygiene.

Glamour Craze Called Blow to Charm

Dr. Maude Nutall Holds Vanity to Blame for Women's Troubles; Scores 'Exaggeration.'

By Genevieve Reynolds.

WOMEN'S current craze for glamour will create artificial beauty as well as increase vanity to the detriment of real charm, predicts Dr. Maude Nutall, widely known psychologist, who is now in Washington completing several books, one of which is entitled, "Husbands As Alibis."

Vanity is to blame for nearly all of women's troubles—or rather "Conflicts"—maintains Dr. Nutall, who was a student of the late Dr. Alfred Adler, famous Viennese psychologist, and founder of the school of "Individual Psychology."

"For instance," she pointed out yesterday at the Shoreham Hotel, "all troubles may be classified under three heads, financial, health, love and marriage. Financial problems for women involve the desire for money to keep up with friends, money for beauty parlors and other things they think make for greater charm. Some women diet rigorously for sylph-like figures and ruin their health. In love and marriage, woman's first concern is hurt vanity. If she loses her husband to another woman she resents the fact that he has found some one else more attractive, rather than regretting the loss of his love.

Sincerity Part of Charm.

Woman's charm, according to Dr. Nutall, is made up of intelligence, naturalness, sincerity, femininity, and the recognition of the fact that she is a woman, first, last and always. She believes that a woman should make the most of her natural beauty by being as physically attractive as possible, but should keep in mind that real men—intelligent thinking men with the proper sense of values in life—look for something in woman beyond mere physical appeal.

For a successful marriage, Dr. Nutall advocates the Biblical theory of gaining one's life by losing it. In explanation of this theory, she says, "A woman should lose her life in her husband's to the extent of keeping pace with him mentally, so she can manifest interest in his work and activities in so far as he desires interest that is to discuss and to forget at his will. She must contribute and co-operate all she can if she expects to receive a full measure of devotion in return; for a real marriage is a matter of going together along a friendly road."

Don't Exaggerate, She Says.

Another factor that enters into a happy marriage is personality, suggests this psychologist who has held important postions in some of the outstanding educational and medical institutions of the country. She defines an attractive personality as the composite of poise, mental alertness, lack of exaggeration in relating incidents, sincerity, dependability and the desire to go out of the way to help other people.

Career women, Dr. Nutall believes, have a better chance to succeed as wives than those who live an entirely domestic existence. She bases this belief on a study and observation of the congenial marriages of men and women in the same scientific and medical professions who have similiar personalities. These husbands and wives are held together by close bonds of work, she points out.

"What causes the failure of so many marriages?" Dr. Nutall was asked.

"One of the chief reasons," she replied, "is woman's inability to understand and admit that 'Love for a man is a thing apart—for a woman 'tis her whole existence.' Man's work comes first and his emotional life next while women usually subordinate work to their love.

"Another big factor causing splits in the homes is the presence of children. By this I mean a lack of co-operation in rearing the child which may be due to either or both parents. Also jealousy of child by either parent brings dissension in the home."

Dr. Nutall lays the major blame on women for the present divorce situation. "At sometime in their married lives one third of all women contemplate a divorce," she said, "and two thirds of all divorces obtained are usually the result of the woman making the first suggestion of one. When something goes wrong in the home the woman always trys to justify her side by alibis. The man seldom places the fault on the woman, but the woman will dig up faults against her husband or expose all that he really possesses."

"The surest way for a woman to attract a man is to radiate the joy of living," added Dr. Nutall. "And the best way to hold him is to banish vanity and lose her life in his."

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Dec. 6.

IT SEEMS to me that we have a trifle more than our share of colorful clergymen, but that may just be because the town is so large and so plentifully dotted with churches. Just at the moment, one of the most interesting of them all is laying down active parish work at the age of 69, and retiring from the active care of one of the most fascinating of the city's meeting houses.

ALICE HUGHES.

The clerical gentleman is the Rev. Dr. William Norman Guthrie, for over 26 years rector of that miraculously enduring little church, St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie. That little Episcopal church is 137 years old, totally surrounded by business and a slummish district of residents. Yet for the last 20 years the rector's innovations and troubles with his superiors in the church have kept St. Mark's constantly in the public eye here. During that time he has substituted such things as ritualistic dancing and addresses by such lay-folk as Eva La Gallienne and Carl Sandburg for the conventional afternoon services on Sunday, to the horror of Bishop Manning. For several years the Bishop withheld his ministrations from St. Mark's owing to Dr. Guthrie's extra-curricular activities, which made him one of the best-known ministers of the town.

I am not interested in the merits of this long-drawn quarrel, but I am interested in the fact that all these years he had managed to keep open this historic and beautiful little old church, which everyone should see, as a quaint survival. It isn't on the Bowery at all, but on Second Avenue, far downtown. But perhaps you won't have a chance, for it is more than possible that without the embattled doctor it will be forced to close, like many other famous downtown meeting houses.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Many a local mother is going to give Dad a pastel portrait of one or more of the family toddlers for Allen Sloan, the artist, has just opened an interesting service for the big shopping season. At one of the avenue's most famous stores he has set up his easel and will do a portrait in 45 minutes. While this is going on, Mamma can be busy among the enchanted aisles. Pretty neat notion, that!

Our writing folk flee to Hollywood to see if those $1,000 bills really do grow on orange trees, but sometimes they're tickled to get back to this town—if they really love it, and many do. Gertrude Lenihan, once fashion editor of the New York Times, is one who has just come home with rampaging joy in her heart. She's the wife of Joel Sayre, brilliant newspaperman, novelist and scenario writer, and is she tickled to be back in this town!...

* * * *

Checking the best sellers for the week, I find A. J. Cronin's "The Citadel" leading the list of novels, and Van Loon's big tome, "The Arts," topping the non-fiction parade. I think the Cronin book a fine piece of work, don't you? ...

Well, women have just scored another "first" here. This time the pioneer was Antonia Brico, director of our women's symphony orchestra, and the other day Tonia swished the stick over a performance of "Hansel and Gretel"—the first time a grand opera has ever been conducted here by one of us. The critical boys allowed that Mme. Brico did a right smart job of baton-waving, too. ...

Sylvia Sidney has been lingering in our midst since the closing of her Theater Guild play, "To Quito and Back." She, too, is a Hollywood hired hand who really loves her native town—this.

Today's HEALTH TALK

by Logan Clendening, M. D.

H. G. Wells on Cures.

Mr. H. G. Wells has been touring the United States and Canada, delivering lectures on the dire state of our present civilization and offering a remedy. As in most cases of social reform, the diagnosis is better than the treatment.

We all recognize the symptoms which endanger civilization with the increase of unemployment, the lack of business stability, danger of war and lack of responsibility for public affairs among private individuals. How it is going to work out nobody knows, and Mr. Wells seems to think there is quite a possibility that it won't work out at all, and that human civilization will disappear. He thinks that while we have improved enormously in mechanical devices, means of transportation and communication, the brain organization of the modern world has not been organized to deal with the new problems which these machines impose.

Mr. Wells' solution is to have an encyclopedia drawn up by the best minds of the world, and have everyone learn the facts about the universe. It seems strange that a man of Mr. Wells' historical outlook would not realize that we have had encyclopedias from the very earliest days of printing, and before. Each of these contained a chapter on medicine, and for that reason I have been interested in them, because some of the early discoveries in medicine were written in these books. The "Margherita Philosophia" was one of these, which was probably in Shakespeare's library. The medieval schoolmen, such as Albertus Magnus, were constantly writing encyclopedias, and they were widely distributed.

One of the most interesting of the encyclopedists was Roger Bacon, that greatest "apparition of the Middle Ages," and in one part of his encyclopedic books he carefully concealed in a cipher the invention by which he is best known today. In this book the first eight chapters were written in clear and readable Latin, but the following chapters, according to an eminent scholar, read like so much gibberish.

The fact is that Bacon had devised what is called the "Argyle Cipher," which consists of a clever way of hiding sentences that are important under a lot of high-sounding phrases and words. Allegedly he was discussing the Elixir of Life and the Philosopher's Stone, and actually he described saltpeter and the making of gunpowder, and he puts the most important sentence, which related to the proportions of the explosive mixture, in an anagram which successfully withstood translation for almost 700 years. Is it not too bad that this encyclopedist's secret was ever rediscovered?

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

"MY WALLS have distemper," she wailed. The lady was exaggerating, but nevertheless dark walls, the sort that aren't deliberately planned by a smart decorator, can present a difficult problem. Not many years ago many English type homes were built with darkish rough plaster walls. We don't think the builders had the esthetic values so much in mind as the fact that such walls are extremely practical, never showing dirt or children's finger marks. But what to do about them if the budget doesn't allow a complete change of wall view?

But what if our furniture bought to last a lifetime does not exactly fit in a background like that? With the dark tan rough plaster, the ideal type of furniture is Jacobean—heavy, sturdy oak that dignifies the dark walls. But with a heterogeneous group of furniture, it is still possible to achieve a pleasant, warm room, even if the walls are darkly forbidding.

The rug should have brilliance. Use a bright Turkish type oriental, a modern rug or a twist weave broadloom in a warm vibrant color. Or polish the floor to shining splendor and use bright throw rugs. The somber walls won't matter if the floor is gleaming. Windows should be treated simply, yet colorfully. Try stripes—clear greens with pale rust, bright blues with deep dubonnet—in simply tailored draw-type draperies and with no glass curtains, of course. Deck your windows with gardens in groups of cacti and succulents to reflect the hardy strength of the room are nice or pottery pots of less usual varieties of ivy.

Furniture can be pulled together with slip covers; a rough textured tweedy material in neutral-toned stripes might be the thing for the sofa, while incisive tones of the colors used in the draperies could be picked out for upholstered chairs. Season with ceramics and get as many highlights in the rooms as possible. Perhaps a huge green bottle standing in one corner will catch the light from the hall and drag it by its heels into the room.

If one or two pieces of furniture can be added try a long, low oak table in front of the fireplace or a sturdy, straight-backed Jacobean armchair.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

While snow slanted across the white and blue flag waving in front of the legation at 2416 Tracy place yesterday, hundreds of diplomats, officials and residents of Washington were talking over the teacups inside—all by way of celebrating Finland's Independence Day.

From genial Minister Eero Jarnefelt himself I got the story of his country's battle cry of freedom, sounded exactly 20 years ago. "It wasn't exactly a battle cry," he explained. "The revolution was a bloodless one, you see. We had been a part of Russia. The Senate declared us independent . . . and that was all."

Yesterday's reception, honoring that brief bit of history, was one of the most colorful and successful of the autumn season. "It's a party with a personality," was the way someone described it, and judging from the way guests came early and stayed late, it certainly was.

HOPE R. MILLER.

The Minister and Mme. Jarnefelt received in the drawing room which was decorated with big bowls of pink roses and bouquets of nasturtiums. Wearing a trim blue and silver metal cloth jacket over a floor-length velvet skirt, Mme. Jarnefelt, one of the most gracious hostesses in the Diplomatic Corps, was a pretty picture as she greeted the long line of guests.

From the drawing room, the general order of milling was toward the dining room, where tea and coffee and the usual dainties were served at a long table bearing a huge bouquet of pink roses in the center. Meanwhile, in the library at the other end of the hall, guests from time to time gathered in small groups to talk . . . to drink champagne which was served here, there and everywhere . . . to talk some more.

Any excuse to linger as long as possible served for the moment, and proof of the reception's success was borne out by the fact that it was still going strong well after 7 o'clock, the final hour set for receiving.

British Ambassador Arrives Early

Among those who came early was Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, who stayed longer than usual at the pleasant party. Three Cabinet hostesses—Mrs. Cordell Hull, Mrs. Homer S. Cummings and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace— were glimpsed in the gathering, and more from the Capital's residential group were on hand than one generally sees at big diplomatic receptions.

Black ensembles set off with white gloves, and a dash of color here and there still dominate the fashion picture, judging from feminine attire yesterday. Three-fourths of the women wore black, approximately half of them setting off their costumes with silver fox capes or scarfs. Others chose brown, dark red or violet velvet, several of the latter keeping on their mink coats during the entire party.

Mingling among the guests was Mme. von Numers, wife of the Secretary of the Finnish Legation. She wore a black frock, cut on simple lines and a dainty carved necklace of silver. Also present was the Minister's sister, Mme. Maija Boldemann, who came over from Finland not long ago and will spend several months at the legation.

The well-known blue book, called the "Diplomatic List," would have to be drawn on heavily for the names of all those who attended. To mention but a few seen among the hundreds of guests—there were Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador; Mme. Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador; the Minister of Switzerland and Mme. Peter; the Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik; Senora Laura de los Rios, wife of the Spanish Ambassador; Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, wife of the Belgian Ambassador; the Minister of the Irish Free State, Michael MacWhite; the Minister of Siam and Mme. Rajamaitri; the Minister of Panama and Senora de Boyd; the Minister of Czechoslovakia and Mme. Hurban; the Latvian minister and Mme. Bilmanis.

Among those who came during the latter half of the reception were the Secretary of Labor, Frances Perkins, who rarely puts in an appearance at diplomatic receptions, and Mrs. Mark Bristol, who rarely misses one. Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, always a popular guest, was there; also Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, the Baroness von Below, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hurja and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon.

Many Social Circles Represented

Mrs. McCook Knox, wearing a stunning frock of wine crepe with gold accents, arrived with Mrs. John Farr Simmons, both of them having just been to see the new exhibition at the Phillips Memorial Gallery. Congratulated on all sides about the early American art display she helped to collect for the Sesquicentennial Celebration of the Constitution, Mrs. McCook modestly mentioned that the Carnegie Institute had asked for the exhibitions but that nothing had been settled about this thus far.

Representative Sol Bloom, director of the Sesquicentennial Commission, was also there with Mrs. Bloom. Among others were Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mrs. Stanley Reed, Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg and Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes.

Also Maj. and Mrs. Parker West, Mrs. Peyton March, the honorary attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harold Sims, Mrs. Russell Bennett and her daughter, Miss Florence Harris; Mr. and Mrs. John Herrick, Mrs. Carlos de Mar, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. J. Fred Essary, Ralph Totten, former United States Minister to South Africa, and Mrs. J. J. Mack.

The affair was attended by many who braved Washington's first snow flurry of the season.

D. C. Girl to Be Bride Thursday Of Englishman in South Africa

Of wide interest to Washington will be the wedding of Miss Frances Abbie Rainey and John Denison Mitchell Luttman-Johnson, scheduled to take place at Port Elizabeth, South Africa, Thursday.

The ceremony will be performed in St. Mary's Cathedral at 3:30 o'clock, the hour and date marking the anniversary of Miss Rainey's mother's wedding and also that of her maternal grandmother.

After her debut here at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Eaton Chase Rainey, the bride-elect left for a visit to South Africa, the trip later developing into a world tour lasting almost two years. Meanwhile, her sister, Fredericka Rainey had decided to enter Johns Hopkins Medical School.

Last spring, Miss Frances Rainey returned to the United States in time for graduation of her sister, who is now practicing in New York City. News of the engagement that will terminate in marriage Thursday became known last summer while the sisters were vacationing at the family summer home on Cape Cod. The trousseau was assembled from cities around the world, with finishing touches from Washington.

Following the wedding, there will be a reception at the Port Elizabeth Country Club of which the bridegroom is an active member. Since going to South Africa recently, Miss Rainey has been the guest of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Rainey went to New York to see their daughter off some weeks ago when she sailed on the Queen Mary. She stayed a short time in London before going on to South Africa. For three successive Sundays before her departure, bans for the wedding were read in Washington Cathedral.

The bridegroom is scion of an old English family. For seven years, since his graduation from London University, he has divided his time between India and South Africa on business of the London firm with which he is connected.

Among wedding gifts for the couple is a 2,700-acre estate, near Port Elizabeth, where the couple will be at home after January 1.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon.

BIG PARTIES, little parties and just middle-sized parties leave virtually no white space on the social calendar from now until New Year's. Dinners, dances, teas, egg-nogg parties, cocktail parties, luncheons and even breakfasts are enough to make your head spin. If all the hors d'oeuvres to be served from now until Christmas were stretched end to end, they would no doubt reach several miles beyond Bethesda.

DUDLEY HARMON.

The British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay will be guests of honor at a dinner to be given on Friday by Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller. The Lindsays are having their most socially active in season in ages, after one year of official mourning and another of poor health for Lady Lindsay. Their presence again at parties and their generous hospitality at the Embassy adds considerable eclat to the Washington scene.

* * * *

A CHRISTMAS in the Capital without the annual Wylie dance that evening would almost seem like Christmas without Santa Claus. So the many friends of Mrs. Katherine Wylie were delighted to receive by the mails an invitation to this affair, which has become tradition. The party will be held as usual in the historic Wylie homestead, that classic red brick residence on Thomas Circle. Son Andrew Wylie, who went on an extended jungle expedition last year, is back again in Washington and will no doubt receive with his mother at the dance.

* * * *

CHRISTMAS VACATION is about the only time society pays much official attention to the subdeb group. But during the holidays they really come into their own, with parties scheduled almost every afternoon in their honor.

Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, will give a tea dance Christmas eve, from 4 to 6:30 at the Embassy for her two children by a former marriage, Louise and Homer Stillwell. The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau have cards out for a similar affair the afternoon of December 30 in honor of their sons, Henry Morgenthau 3d and Robert Morris Morgenthau. They will be home from school and college then. The party will be held at the Morgenthau residence on Thirtieth street near Rock Creek, which was occupied last year by Representative and Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill will give a dinner December 22 before a dance to be held for young people at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover. Capt. and Mrs. Albert Cushing Read will give a dance Tuesday evening, December 21, for their son and daughter, Cushman and Betty Read. Mr. and Mrs. William James Flather, jr., have cards out for a party on the Tuesday evening after Christmas in honor of their daughter, Georgianna Flather.

* * * *

TO GET BACK to the older set: Mr. and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot will have friends lunching with them Sunday at their residence here . . . Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn will be joined sometime in the week by their son-in-law, Count Guy de Baillet Latour, who arrived in New York yesterday on the Normandie. A Countess de Baillet Latour, no doubt the mother of the Dunns' son-in-law, is listed as a member of the ultra-aristocratic house party now going on at Welbeck Abbey, country home of the Duke of Portland. King Leopold and his brother, Prince Charles of Belgium, and their mother, Queen Elizabeth, are honor guests at the party. Countess Latour came to Washington for her son's wedding over a year ago.

South Carolina Society To Entertain Delegation

The South Carolina Society will open its social season with a supper dance at the Shoreham Hotel December 15 in honor of members of the Congressional delegation and their wives.

2,000 Navy Men Attend Charles Edison's Party

The party which the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Charles Edison gave yesterday afternoon resembled a White House reception. Naval officers stationed in Washington and their wives, some 2,000 strong, drove out to the Army and Navy Country Club, in Virginia, to pay their respects, and the line waiting to say "how-do-you-do" stretched all the way from the doorway through a smaller reception room and into the hall where the hosts stood.

Members of the Marine Band, in their picturesque scarlet coats, played gaily during the afternoon. Other marines were stationed here and there and sailors in uniform opened the door and called cars for the guests.

The clubhouse was festively decorated with festoons of smilax on the balcony and around the pillars. The receiving party stood against a bank of palms as Comdr. Harold J. Nelson, aide to Mr. Edison, made the introductions. Receiving with the hosts were Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy; Mrs. William D. Leahy, wife of the Chief of Naval Operations, and Mrs. Thomas Holcombe, wife of the Commandant of the Marine Corps.

Autumn Flowers As Decorations

Chrysanthemums were everywhere—in the center of the enormous buffet, and in vases placed on tables in the spacious halls and living room. The tea table was further decorated with candles in silver holders.

Almost every other person in the room was an admiral. Rear Admiral and Mrs. David Foote Sellers even came all the way from Annapolis for the party. Others were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Harold G. Bowen, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Adolphus Andrews, with their pretty daughter, Miss Frances Andrews, who was one of the young ladies assisting during the afternoon; the Chief of Naval Intelligence, Rear Admiral Ralston Holmes, Mrs. Holmes and their daughter, Miss Sally Holmes, who leaves next month for Cairo, Egypt, on a translating job for the State Department; Rear Admiral and Mrs. G. J. Rowcliff, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Thomas Hart, the Commandant of the Navy Yard, Rear Admiral George I. Pettingill, with Mrs. Pettingill, who poured tea during the afternoon, and Rear Admiral and Mrs. Joseph Richardson.

Is Biggest Navy Affair of Autumn

Others present at the biggest reception so far this year were the genial and popular Commander Ralph Bates, Capt. and Mrs. J. O. Gawne and their attractive daughter, Miss Christine Gawne, Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. Edward Craig, Mrs. Mary Rohrshack, in black with a double scarf of silver foxes; Mr. and Mrs. William A. New.

Also Capt. James W. Woods, Commander and Mrs. Walter Delany, Maj. and Mrs. John W. Beckett, Commander and Mrs. Gerald Linke, the latter in a brown velvet frock and a hat with a veil; Capt. and Mrs. Chester Nimitz; Capt. and Mrs. Albert Norris, Maj. and Mrs. John W. Beckett, Lieut. Comdr. Wells Roberts, Col. Leroy B. Hunt and Commander H. J. Redfield, jr.

Invitations Issued For 3 Christmas Debutante Parties

Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Edward Warren Sturdevant have cards out for a tea December 23 in honor of their daughter, Miss Mary Alice Sturdevant, a student at Bryn Mawr. The party will take place at their home at 3006 P street in Georgetown.

Comdr. and Mrs. Robert Melville Griffin have issued invitations to a tea December 20, at which their daughter, Miss Patricia Hemming Griffin, will be presented to Capital society at the home of her parents, 3512 Rittenhouse street. She is attending Smith College in Northampton, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Franklin Burton have invited a number of friends to a tea, December 22, at which their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Anne Burton, will make her bow to society. The event will take place from 4 to 7 o'clock at 2029 Connecticut avenue where the Burtons live. Now a student at Sarah Lawrence College, Miss Burton formerly attended Gunston Hall.

Many From D.C. Attend Famous Baltimore Ball

The second oldest social function in the country — the Bachelors' Cotillion in Baltimore—attracted a large contingent from Washington when it was held last evening at Baltimore. Only the St. Cecelia's cotillion at Charleston, S. C., has a longer history than this famous ball, which was originated in 1796, when it was called the Monday German.

The Lyric Theater was crowded last night with Baltimore's best. The ladies were dressed in their most elaborate gowns, and all the family jewels were taken out for the occasion. Strands of smilax hung from the walls and chandeliers.

Those from Washington included Miss Louise Burke, debutante daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John Burke, of Tracy place. She wore a handsome gown of white brocade, simply made.

Mrs. Harry Grant Meem entertained informally at dinner before the cotillion for their daughters, the Misses Ann Carroll and Eleanor Eastbourne Meem, who were presented to society in the Thanksgiving season. They wore their debutante dresses of white net, made with very full skirts and blue velvet bows at the neck. Their escorts were Charles van der Straten-Ponthoz, son of the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, and Igor Cassini.

A New York debutante with Washington connections who attended the dance was Miss Virginia Bacon Penfield, daughter of the late Walter Scott Penfield of Washington and granddaughter of Mrs. William Mark Conrad of Washington. She wore a gown of white satin and tulle and carried an old-fashioned bouquet as well as roses and orchids. Her escorts were David Harrison and Frederic Lee of Baltimore. Miss Penfield, who made her debut at the Tuxedo Ball in Tuxedo Park earlier in the season, will be presented later in the year at a dance on the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf Astoria in New York.

One of the loveliest gowns at the Cotillion was the Vionnet model worn by Miss Carolina Cecil, debutante daughter of Col. and Mrs. Joseph Cecil, of Washington. Her frock had a bodice of gold cloth and full skirt of gold lace. Before the call she attended a dinner given at the Mount Vernon Club in Baltimore by Mrs. George F. Becker, of Washington, for her sub-debutante niece, Miss Anne Underwood, who also attended the ball.

Miss Sturdevant Is Also Present

Another guest at Mrs. Becker's dinner was Miss Mary Alice Sturdevant, daughter of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Edward Warren Sturdevant, who will make her bow to society at a tea to be given by her parents December 23. For the Cotillion, Miss Sturdevant chose a frock of red chiffon trimmed in gold and set off with gold orchids.

Miss Betty Galt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Galt, of Hyattsville, wore last evening a white chiffon frock made with a full skirt, and a fitted bodice with short puffed sleeves. She carried an old fashioned bouquet. Her great-great-great-grandmother Betsy Burland, made her debut at the same cotillion during Revolution days.

Others from Washington who attended the ball were Miss Letitia Moore Knox, debutante daughter of Mrs. Fordney Knox, and Miss Elaine Fitzhugh Powell Heiskell, who made her debut last month at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Heiskell. Last evening she attended a dinner given in her honor by Mrs. William Boggs, and was escorted to the dance by William Powell Blair.

Mrs. Cajigas to Honor Senora Lily de Eglinton

Senora Lily Campbell de Eglinton will be the guest of honor at a farewell luncheon today in the main dining room of the Carlton Hotel. The affair, to be given by Mrs. Tomas Cajigas, will be attended by 20 guests.

Senora Lily Campbell de Eglington has been visiting her parents, the Commercial Attache of the Chilean Embassy and Senora de Campbell. She will leave here Thursday for New York City, where she will sail for her home in Chile.

Central Players Club To Give Local Comedy

The annual Christmas sale of All Hallows Guild, the garden guild of Washington Cathedral, which takes place every year for the benefit of the garden work of the Cathedral, opened yesterday morning, with Mrs. Raymond L. Wolven, daughter of Bishop and Mrs. James E. Freeman, in charge. She is chairman of the Cottage Herb Garden Committee.

The sale is scheduled to continue through Christmas eve.

Among the Cottage Herb Garden aides who will assist her are Mrs. William Earl Clark, Mrs. Phillip Hubert Frohman, Miss Lucy Adee, Mrs. H. F. Dorman, Miss Roberta Grant, Mrs. James Henderson, Mrs. Albert H. Lucas, Mrs. M. Matthew, Mrs. Benjamin R. Lindsley, Mrs. Gerald O'Grady, Mrs. R. Pearson, Mrs. J. Shands, Mrs. A. Russell, Miss Phyllis Snyder, Mrs. John Warner, Mrs. V. P. Wilson and Mrs. Charles Wright.

Among the articles offered for sale in the Herb Garden's cottage are containers of dried herbs, potpourris, lavenders, garden books and sachets. Also rosemary, ivy from Canterbury Cathedral, Dolly Madison boxwood and Irish yew.

Mrs. Henry Caraway Addresses Women's Republican Club

New York Group President Urges National Members to Demand That Congress Get Down to Business and Restore Order.

Women should raise a voice which can be heard in public affairs, Mrs. Henry Caraway, president of the Women's National Republican Club, of New York, told members of the Women's Republican League yesterday afternoon at their meeting in the Mayflower. "We have it in our power to demand that Congress get down to business and bring order out of the chaos in this country," she asserted. "If we are not vocal, they can well say they do not know what we want. If men can't be vocal, let the women do it."

Mrs. Caraway urged the members of the league—those who maintained their voting residence outside of the District—to write their Representatives in Congress and to make their influence felt. The first requisite in expressing an opinion is to have facts well in hand, she pointed out, and to this end, advised attending sessions of Congress, reading the bills under consideration and the discussion of them.

"We find in Congress coercion, lack of courage, inconsistency, but what can we expect, if we do not tell our Representatives what we want and stand behind them? We must strengthen them by letting them know what we want and how we want it," she said.

"We must also make people realize," said Mrs. Caraway, "that we have no quarrel with the social objectives of the present Administration, but with the methods, which are so fantastic and so unworkable that, after five years, we are back where we started from."

Mme. Cantacuzene, president of the league, presided at the meeting and, after Mrs. Caraway's address, introduced "Dolly," charming new "member" of the league, given by Mrs. Edward E. Gann as a prize for a guessing contest. "Dolly" is a doll who has been named something other than "Dolly" by Mrs. Gann. The name has been written and placed in a sealed envelope and what it is will be guessed by members of the league as they contribute to the fund of the organization. On December 18, the winner will be awarded the doll, which has already done her bit for the Army Relief Society, and is now expected to be a Christmas gift for the small daughter or granddaughter of a league member. She will remain at the clubhouse with all her new clothes until she finds her new home.

Mme. Cantacuzene entertained at luncheon preceding the session yesterday, in honor of Mrs. Caraway, who returned to New York immediately after the program.

Mrs. C. J. Colden Reviews Voyage

Mrs. Charles J. Colden, wife of Representative Colden, of California, yesterday addressed the Women's National Democratic Club at its weekly luncheon, telling of her trip to the Scandinavian countries last summer.

Mrs. Colden spoke enthusiastically of conditions in Norway, where, without the immense resources of many other nations, the people are happy, content, well fel, comfortably clothed and imbued with the co-operative spirit.

Telephones, telegraph, electric plants, the movies and theater are all lefficiently and profitably run by the government, with subsequent cheap rates which bring them within reach of everyone, she said. One thing she noted, however, was that washing machines, despite the cheap electric rates, are a scarcity.

One interesting contrast drawn by Mrs. Colden was the condition of the farmer in this country with that of those in the countries where production is controlled.

At the head table with Mrs. Colden were Mrs. Frank Buck, wife of Representative Buck, of California; Mrs. Carroll Stewart, of the Veterans' Administration, a fellow Californian, who introduced her; Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, president of the club; Mr. Hubbard and Mrs. Edward B. Meigs.

Mrs. Edward B. Izac, of California, entertained a group of ten, each a Congressional wife. These were Mrs. Clarence F. Lea, of California; Mrs. Sam C. Massingale, of Oklahoma; Mrs. John A. Martin, of Colorado; Mrs. J. Buell Snyder, of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Joseph Meeks, of Illinois; Mrs. Robert Ramsey, of West Virginia; Mrs. Aaron Ford, of Mississippi; Mrs. Tom Ford, of California, and Mrs. John Sparkman, of Alabama. Another Congressional wife at the party was Mrs. Herman Kopplemann, of Connecticut, a guest of Mrs. Paul A. Linebarger.

This Morning

Flaherty Once Giant, Thats the Laugh.

By Shirley Povich.

For the Giants, the irony of it all must have been that the coach of the Redskins was a chap whom the Giants' coach had recommended to George Marshall as a man who might do well with Marshall's team. Ray Flaherty was the Giants' gift to the Redskins.

POVICH.

So it seems that the New York Club helped to bring that 49-14 beating on themselves. Until they met up with that Flaherty-coached team of last Sunday, the Giants had never yielded more than one touchdown to any foe. On Sunday they yielded seven and the fellow who had planned that Redskin attack, who unleashed the most furious attack ever seen on a professional gridiron was their former colleague, Flaherty.

At the start of the 1936 season, Flaherty was a retired end with the Giants who was helping Steven Owens with the coaching. At Boston, George Marshall was digusted with the progress (?) of his Redskins and enlisted Owens' aid in a search for a new coach. Owens recommended Flaherty and on the strength of that recommendation, Flaherty got the job.

Ever since, Flaherty has been no less than plague and torment to the Giants. Almost immediately, the Redskins started clicking and when it came to the final game for the Eastern championship of 1936, there were the Redskins in there against the Giants, with the winner scheduled to meet the Packers for the league title. The winner was Flaherty's team, 14 to 0.

Pupil Beats Master.

Master and pupil met again in the opening game of this season. Owens brought to Washington a team of Giants that seemed fated to breeze through the Eastern opposition and charge into the West playoff for the league title. He had Leemans and Danowski and Widseth and Grant and a slew of stars. But once again it was Flaherty triumphing over Owens, the Redskins winning, 13 to 3, and all but blighting the Giants' season at the outset.

Up there at the Polo Grounds the Giants stepped on the field against the Redskins, needing only a tie to gain the right to play the Bears

Conference Bid Likely For Catholic

Despite the fact that Catholic University has neither filed an application nor received a bid, rumor has it that the school will be admitted as the sixteenth member of the Southern Conference when the association meets next week-end in Richmond.

Arthur "Dutch" Bergman, grid coach and athletic director of the Cardinals, is expected to attend the meeting, or send a representative from the school to further the negotiations.

The conference maximum is 16 and the list will probably be filled at the meeting. On the action of the University of Virginia, which may seek reinstatement, and would probably be favored, is expected to hinge the locals' chances.

Bergman has long stressed the need of a conference of league tie-up for the Cardinals and the Southern body would be an ideal spot for Catholic, as a majority of its members have been played by the Cards in the past few years.

Conference members have appeared prominently on the Card's schedule. South Carolina and North Carolina State have been homecoming foes of the Card gridmen for three consecutive years. Duke and Maryland's boxers are on the 1937 schedule, while V. P. I., Duke, Wake Forest, Maryland and other schools have repeatedly appeared on the court card.

The scholastic standards of the local school are among the highest in the country and would fit in with the high academic standards of the Southern group. The local school is a member of the Association of American Universities.

N. Y. Acclaims Redskins

New York sports writers heaped their praises on the Redskins yesterday following the Washington team's 49-14 defeat of the Giants. In every Metropolitan journal the Redskins were acclaimed for their triumphs.

Following are quotations from New York editions:

Arthur J. Daley, New York Times—"There is not a superlative in the English language that can quite describe the magnificance of the Redskins. Their charging had the New Yorkers rocked completely on their heels, their passing had them bewildered and their running was a gem of football perfection.

"The way Battles carried the ball had to be seen to be believed. No greater back ever appeared on the Polo Grounds than the one-time West Virginia Wesleyan ace."

Stanley Woodward, New York Herald-Tribune—"Sammy Baugh and Cliff Battles make an unbeatable combination . . . without regard for the carefully kept National League statistics, which may or may not confirm our selections, we nominate Battles as the greatest runner in professional football and Baugh as the greatest passer.

"At least 30 per cent of the Giants' running plays failed to reach the line of scrimmage . . . The Giants obviously were frightened to death of Baugh's passing and Riley Smith took advantage of the psychological situation, running when New York expected passes and passing when runs seemed to be in order."

Garry Schumacher, New York Journal-American—"Maybe the Washington Redskins aren't the greatest team that ever played in New York . . . but they provided the big town's most exciting gridiron spectacle. Pitted against the strongest defensive team in the league, Battles literally tore it to shreds."

New York World-Telegram—"Battles, Baugh, Smith and Pinckert were the greatest running, passing, blocking backfield ever seen in these parts, but it was the Redskin line which paved the way for one of the worst routs in pro annals."

Frank Graham, New York Sun—"If Sammy Baugh's showing in his first appearance in New York is typical, the fellow who said he was the greatest forward passer football ever had seen was guilty of understatement."

Grid Tax Row Due for Court

Supreme Bench May Be Asked for Ruling.

The Supreme Court may be asked to decide whether football is an "essential State function," according to the Associated Press.

Four State universities—Iowa, West Virginia, Minnesota, and Georgia—have challenged the Government's right to force them to collect the tax.

One has won a suit in lower courts to prevent payment of the taxes to the Federal Treasury. The Government won another, and two cases are pending. The four suits involve a total of $119,332 in admission taxes.

Amusement tax laws levy 10 per cent on all admissions of more than 40 cents. The Government has ruled that the State universities must collect the tax and pay it to the collector of internal revenue.

But the universities contend the Government is without authority to tax a State institution performing an essential State function—football is essential they say.

The Internal Revenue Bureau disagrees. Football, says the bureau, isn't an essential tate function. Furthermore, the bureau argues, the tax isn't levied on the State institutions themselves, but on the football fans who buy the tickets, and the universities are merely collectio agents.

The bureau sued the University of Minnesota for $108,157; West Virginia for $2,029 and Iowa for $4,335, while Georgia sought to avoid paying $4,810.

Grid 'Gates' On Increase Since '29-'32

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 6.—Football attendance figures, rising steadily since the depression years 1929-1932, continued on the upbeat in 1937 despite twin handicaps of a business recession and bad weather in the climax stages of the season.

Statistics on home gan.es of 75 representative colleges and universities in every section of the country, as furnished to the Associated Press, show a 4 per cent increase in attendance and receipts over 1936. The survey disclosed 7,744,803 fans witnessed 387 games, compared to last year's attendance of 7,613,768 at 397 games.

Though the rise from 1936 to 1937 suffers by comparison to the 15 per cent climb from 1935 to 1936, it is noteworthy because many colleges, particularly those in the East, were severely hit at the box office by weather conditions on the last four Saturdays. In spite of this damper on some of the year's biggest games, the East as a whole showed a 1 per cent increase over 1936.

The Atlantic Seaboard schools were last on the sectional list. Joint leaders were the South and Southwest, where hot conference competition helped boost attendance 16 per cent. Whizzer White and his mates at undefeated Colorado helped Jack up Rocky Mountain figures 14 per cent. The Midwest and Far West game next with 6 and 5 per cent, respectively.

The Far West and Middle West, as in 1936, were tops for individual game attendance. A turn-out of 1,310,271 customers for 41 games gave the Pacific Coast an average attendance of 31,958. In the Middle West the average was 25,745, based on 68 games that drew 7,750,664 fans.

Schools drawing the greatest number of fans were:

In the East—Yale, 250,000 to seven games; Army, 248,300 to seven games; Pennsylvania, 243,000 to six games; Pittsburgh, 241,000 to six games.

In the Middle West—Ohio State, 274,432 to five games; Minnesota, 250,000 to five games; Michigan, 220,000 to four games.

In the South—Tulane, 143,000 to seven games; Duke, 129,000 to four games; Louisiana State, 119,186 to seven games.

In the Rockies—Denver, 78,197 to seven games; Utah, 67,970 to five games; Colorado U., 46,145 to six games.

In the Far West—Southern California 337,000 to seven games; California, 263,000 in six games; U. C. L. A., 215,500 in six games.

Flaherty Orders Rest After Team's Big Day

Redskins to Resume Workouts Today Leave for Chicago, Scene of League Championship Battle, on Wednesday.

Mildly dazed by the city-wide acclaim that followed their triumphant return from New York, Washingtons Redskins set their sights yesterday on Chicago and Sunday's championship battle with the Bears.

Head Coach Ray Flaherty gave his athletes a day off from the drudgery of practice but workouts will start again today. On Wednesday, the Redskins will entrain for Chicago.

And in Chicago on Sunday, the Redskins will not be friendless. Throughout yesterday, the Redskins office here was besieged by inquiries of Washington fans seeking reservations for the game. Railroads are already planning special excursion trains and a gathering of 1,000 Washington fans is expected at Chicago.

Redskin players, after five lean years in Boston, were literally flabbergasted by their wild reception by Washington fans. "Wotta town!" was the expression heard most frequently at the team's headquarters yesterday.

Town Heroes.

"After some of those games in Boston we felt like crawling into a hole and pulling it in afterwards," said Capt. Turk Edwards. "Boston never did warm up to us. This hero business is new to us, but it's swell."

Except for the black eye collected by Cliff Battles, Riley Smith's painful bruise on his elbow and varied minor bumps, the Redskins emerged undamaged from the Giants' affair in which they rolled up seven touchdowns to deal a New York team it's worst defeat in league history.

Coach Flaherty believes that his team will be at its physical peak against the Bears, with the added comfort of Don Irwin's return to the line-up. A bruised back kept the plunging Irwin on the bench throughout the New York game.

Elated by the accuracy of his scouts' reports on the Giants, Flaherty is hopeful that his friends who have been scouting the Bears are equally as efficient.

The Bears loom as even a higher hurdle than the Giants. Only one team—the Packers—have been able to beat the Bears this season, and Flaherty is not drawing any conclusions from the 3-to-3 tie the Bears played against the Giants.

Nagurski to Play.

The Redskins have reason to fear the Bears. In that Chicago backfield are such as the redoubtable Bronko Nagurski, Beattie Feathers, Ray Buivid, Sam Francis, Jack Manders, Ken Molesworth and Pug Rentner.

The Bears, like the Redskins, were "hot" last Sunday, taking the bit in their teeth after the Chicago Cardinals had run up a 14-to-0 lead, and scoring 42 points. And they scored those 42 points without the benefit of the services of Nagurski, who was watching the game from the stands, resting in preparation for the game Sunday.

Like virtually every other team that has faced the Redskins this season, the Bears have a counter-threat for Sammy Baugh. Ray Buivid is the man. Buivid, who played his college football at Marquette, was ranked second only to Baugh as the best passer in college ranks of 1936.

Hackney to Play With East's Stars

Hamilton, N. Y., Dec. 6 (U.P.).—Alex Wojiechowicz, Fordham's all-American center; Joe Nee, Harvard's star guard, and Elmore (Honey) Hackney, speedy Duke halfback, today accepted invitations to play with the Eastern all-star eleven against the all-West team in San Francisco's charity game on New Year's day.

These players were the first selected by Andy Kerr, Colgate coach, and Bernie Bierman, Minnesota mentor, who will choose 22 players from teams east of the Mississippi. Proceeds of the annual game go to the Shrine Hospital for crippled children.

N. L. Heads Veto Player Extension

All-Star Game Awarded to Cincinnati in July.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—The National League unanimously voted down an extension of the team player limit from 23 to 25 members tonight and recommended that the major leagues confer in the near future with college authorities over means of regulating the signing of college players by professional clubs.

Ford Frick, president of the senior circuit, said the proposal to forbid clubs from signing college players until their classes had been graduated or unless they had received written approval from their college president, had received the "full approval of the National League."

The proposal was rejected by the minor leagues at Milwaukee and no definite action is possible until the 1939 winter meetings. The National League, however, will recommend to the American League at the majors' joint session Wednesday that a committee be appointed to confer with intercollegiate authorities to discuss means of eliminating the numerous complaints of college "cradle snatching" of promising youngsters by professional clubs. The senior circuit also will recommend that in 1938 the proposal be resubmitted for consideration by the minors and majors.

The National League Club members recommended the annual all-

Dinneen Quits Calling 'Em After 28 Years

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—Forty-three years in baseball—15 as a pitcher and 28 as an American League umpire—ended for William Henry (Big Bill) Dinneen today. Over the protests of President Will Harridge, who pleaded with him for another year of calling 'em, Dinneen resigned his umpiring post. Illness was given by the 63-year-old star of the gay nineties as the reason for his resignation.

Dinneen, dean of the American League umpires, began his baseball career with Toronto in 1895. Making good, he went to big time, pitching for Washington, the Boston Braves and Red Sox and St. Louis Browns. Over his entire career he pitched 3,074 innings, winning 170 games and losing 179. He pitched one no-hit game, and reached his zenith in 1903 with the Red Sox when he won 21 and then pitched four world series games against Pittsburgh, winning three and losing one.

BILL DINNEEN.

"Big Bill," rated by President Harridge as one of the best callers of balls and strikes in the business, began umpiring in the American League in 1910. His philosophy of umpiring was this:

"An umpire, to be successful, must use diplomacy. You can not treat them all alike. You must get rough with some, while others you can turn back with a smile or a quiet remark. Naturally, as a former pitcher, I had a better break than many umpires."

Dinneen, who always took time out to see that his name was spelled correctly with all three of the "n's" in his last name, was born in Syracuse, N. Y., and liked that city so well he always kept his home there.

His departure, followed by that of Charley Johnston, left two openings in the American League staff, which were immediately filled by Bill Grieve, up from the American Association, and the veteran Eddie Rommel, former pitching star of the Philadelphia Athletics, who called 'em in the International League last year.

Post Notes on HUNTING

Almost overnight, the ducks that were coming into Occoquan Bay in veritable clouds, that reminded hunters of days gone by, passed on to other feeding grounds more to their liking.

Just what the real trouble is, no one seems to know, unless it was the great activity that has prevailed during the first week of shooting.

ACKERMAN.

With weather as warm as we have had for the past few days, abnormal movement in any section regardless of the amount of feed, is liable to hold them off. This is true of even the easy decoying blackheads that have supplied the best part of all bags so far.

Until Wednesday, the shooting all down the Virginia shore was something to write home about; the kind of sport that hunters have been hoping for, and in numbers that they might reasonably expect if the preseason reports of wildfowl increase were correct.

Imagine our surprise when Bob Burdette called on Friday to say that the bags of that day, and Thursday, too, had dropped to almost nothing.

• • • •

In Nanjemoy Narrows, where George King and Joe Turner have their blind, the first few days of shooting supplied sport that was so far beyond any they have enjoyed for the past several years, that early this week Joe was hotfooting it around town after smaller blackhead decoys to replace the larger canvasbacks they were using.

They noted plenty of canvasbacks coming in on opening day, which would seem only natural with that kind of decoys, if it had been a little later in the season. These ducks, like mallards, don't readily decoy until the weather is considerably colder.

Signs such as these, and the reports from the upper bay noting such great numbers of canvasbacks, do portend that the stringent restrictions under which we have been shooting are beginning to show results.

For anyone wanting to hunt in this section, see George Bowen at Solomons. There are several blinds that are available for the usual reasonable fee.

• • • •

Judge William S. Snow, member of the Virginia Conservation Commission from Alexandria, has been shooting the lower Virginia bay shore every day that he has found it possible to get away; with results that can't be topped—he has had his limit every time.

Possibly there are as many or more hunters who would like to shoot in Currituck who haven't called for information like the many who have.

One of the greatest duck-shooting sections on the whole Atlantic Coast, it is possible to hire blinds and guides in every village and along the entire stretch of sound, but that is also true of the whole Carolina coast.

For those who would rather write ahead and make reservations, try J. F. Gard, at Popular Branch, in Currituck County. His phone is 452. Rates are the current $10 for two in blind with guide, while board is $3 per day per person. He can take parties of as many as ten.

Many local hunters feel that they have not been shooting unless they get at least one trip to the Currituck country for ducks and brant, a section that has seen diminishing flights the same as others have, but in nowhere near the same proportion.

Capt. Floyd Rollins, of Messick, Va., who generally follows the fishing season by guiding duck hunters, stopped in to let us know that because the shooting was so poor last season hardly more than a dozen blinds have been erected this year in his section.

The lower Virginia shore was one of the last areas in the Chesapeake to feel the shortage of wild fowl, and seldom the day, until last year, that hunters were not able to get their bag limit with little or no trouble.

The returning abundance of eel grass in that locality will probably bring a quick return of ducks to the area; more than likely this year, if the initial reports from the few hunters we know who have already hunted there are any criterion.

Most Valuable.

Filly Pays Her Backers $19 Ticket

Crowd of 4,000 Braves Cold and Snow to Follow Nags.

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

with a $19 mutuel resulting. Jockey Herbie Lauch piloted her to the imaginary wire a neck in front of Tempting Witch, the favorite, in the field of eight. Eblis was a well-beaten third at the end of the 4½ furlongs.

The horses ran on a chocolate-colored oval that stood out in a field of white. Snow flurries fell last night and today, but did not interfere with the sport. Despite the promise of a bad day, upward of 1,000 arrived at the track on the race train and another 3,000 used another means of transportation to the plant.

Sheknows was clocked in .53 1-5 over the slow track.

Jack Greenock, a long shot, flattered his backers by taking an early lead. However, Tempting Witch and Sheknows were soon making it hot for him. Swinging for the stretch, Tempting Witch went to the front, but Sheknows had too many stretch guns for her rival and wore her down in the final sixteenth.

Jockey Lou Machado is confined to the Charles Town Hospital with an infected eye, the result of being struck by a stone, tossed by a horse hoof on the opening day. It is unlikely that he will ride another horse at this meeting.

Lula Khayyam was in front from start to finish in the opening event under a hustling ride by Jockey H. Simmons. The juvenile filly led Gold Crescent to the wire by a length and a half, with Bud Carmen third. A field of eight competed and the winner paid $6.

Gallopette, setting the pace, escaped much crowding at the first turn and went on to win by a length and a quarter from Choice Goods. Deadeye Dick was third in the group of eight. Jockey G. Napier gave the winner a good ride. Choice Goods, Little Corporal and Keyed Up were among the horses knocked back in the jam. Gallopette paid $9.40.

Apathy, a $5 favorite, ran Kepi into defeat and then held a length advantage over Halloo at the finish. Lovely Amelia was third in the mile-and-an-eighth test of the last race.

CLOUDWINN	(Berg)	113	3	8	8	8	8	8		62.30

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GALLOPETTE, $9.40, $5.00, $2.80; CHOICE GOODS, $4.40, $3.00; DEADEYE DICK, $3.20.

GALLOPETTE outran the field to the first turn to lead, shook off the challenge of CHOICE GOODS and continued willingly under pressure. CHOICE GOODS, blocked at the first turn, went to the leaders approaching the backstretch and went willingly thereafter. DEADEYE DICK lacked racing room at the first turn and gained steadily when clear. PETEE LAD tired gradually.

THIRD RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For fillies and mares, 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:31. Off at 2:36. Winner, E. Johnston's ch. m. (6), by Mainmast—Reluctant II. Trained by O. F. Kent. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 0:53 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NAY NAY, $7.60, $4.20, $2.60; ROYAL PURCHASE, $4.60, $2.80; TODY WEST, $2.40.

NAY NAY, in the thick of contention from the start, wore down TODY WEST gradually under good handling, but just lasted to stave off the closing rush of ROYAL PURCHASE. The latter was close up from the start and rallied gamely on the outside and would have been the winner in another stride. TODY WEST was rushed to the top, took the lead approaching the stretch, but was weakening at the end. GEE SHARP gained gradually. WILD BLONDE broke first, but lacked speed.

DAILY DOUBLE PAID $27.60.

FOURTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $500. For all ages. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:01. Off at 3:03. Winner, Mrs. D. A. Buckley's b. g. (3), by Tall Timber—Mischief. Trained by J. Y. Christmas. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:27.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CLEAN HEELS, $6.00, $3.80, $2.80; TROSTAR, $6.40, $4.20; TULEYRIES LAD, $4.40.

CLEAN HEELS rushed to contention at once, was rated on the outside and, close to the pace of TROSTAR to the stretch, responded to urging to be up in the concluding strides. TROSTAR, a good pace and closed gamely, but was unable to resist the winner. TULEYRIES LAD gained gradually from a slow beginning. WAUGH SCOUT tired after moving up.

FIFTH RACE—About 4½ furlongs. The Charleston. Purse, $500. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:30. Off at 3:34. Winner, Silver Hill Stable's ch. f. (4), by Jack High—Playaway. Trained by F. Waring. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:53 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SHE KNOWS, $19.00, $6.40, $5.00; TEMPTING WITCH, $3.20, $2.60; EBLIS, $3.80.

SHE KNOWS worked her way up on the outside, was steadied into the stretch and then rallied to pressure to wear down TEMPTING WITCH. The latter, strongly handled from the start, ran JACK GREENOCK into defeat, but was unable to resist the winner while kept to punishment. EBLIS was away poorly and improved his position gradually to close gamely. JACK GREENOCK stopped. PROTEUS could not keep up after getting a step at the break.

SIXTH RACE—Six and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:00. Off at 4:01½. Winner, Claude Feltner's ch. g. (5), by Sedgfield—Charlotte O. Trained by Claude Feltner. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:55 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JOBAKHETA, $6.20, $3.40, $2.20; TWO BROOMS, $4.60, $2.40; JIM JOHN, $2.20.

JOBAKHETA, closest to the pace of TWO BROOMS from the start, went around the leader approaching the stretch and drew far out to win with speed in reserve. TWO BROOMS, first away, set the pace and continued with good courage, but was no match for the winner. JIM JOHN lacked speed to get to the front and went evenly under hard handling. BEST POLICY closed gamely. The others were outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:31. Off at 4:31½. Winner, Mrs. J. H. Elliott's ch. g. (5), by Tryster—Garristown. Trained by D. Yates. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 2:02 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—APATHY, $5.00, $3.20, $2.20; HALLOO, $4.20, $2.60; LOVELY AMELIA, $2.60.

APATHY ran KEPI into defeat, was rated along with LOVELY AMELIA and easily held HALLOO safe in the final drive. HALLOO worked his way to contention, but hung in the final stages. LADY AMELIA weakened after pressing APATHY for a half. KEPI dropped back after showing keen early speed. The others could not reach contention. JIM BROOM lost stirrup.

Costly Work Sanctioned At Pimlico

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 6.—The expenditure of between $200,000 and $300,000 for improvements at the Pimlico Race Track next year was voted today at a meeting of the Maryland Jockey Club. A new clubhouse and a new paddock, both to be completed before the opening of the spring meetin gnext May 2, will be constructed. In addition plans were made to remove the famous "infield hill," which has obstructed the vision of many spectators, and to improve the grandstand. This latter work will not be started until after the spring session, however.

The 12-day May session at Pimlico will be another "stake-a-day" meeting even more pretentious than the program this fall. On May 7, when the Kentucky Derby will be run at Churchill Downs, Pimlico will offer a $25,000 stake as wel las the usual $7,500 added Pimlico Oaks.

The $20,000 added Dixie Handicap, heretofore contested on Derby Day, will be run May 11. Nomination for all stakes close on February 15 with the exception of supplementary entries for the Preakness which close April 15.

Charles McLennan, racing secretary at many of the Nation's leading tracks, will be in charge at Pimlico starting with the May meeting, it was announced. However, Frank Bryant will remain as racing secretary in charge of steeplechase events.

Three new directors were named. They are Henry A. Parr, 3d, W. W. Lanahan and David Wood.

Erwin Rudolph Performs Here In an Exhibition

Erwin Rudolph, three times holder of the world's title at pocket billiards, will perform for local enthusiasts tonight when he meets a designated player to be named before the match at the Royal Billiard Parlor, 817 14th street northwest.

"Rudy" appears here in the first of a series of six exhibitions sponsored by the proprietor of the local academy and the National Billiard Program.

Holder of the accepted high run record for exhibition contest, a break of 277 balks, made at Great Falls, S. C., in 1935, Rudolph first won the world's title in 1927 from Ralph Greenleaf, in a three night match, again led the pack in a 12-handed tournament in 1930. His third championship was won in 1933 at Chicago, defeating such stars as Greenleaf, Ponzi, Kelly, Mosconi, Caras, Allen and others of championship calibre.

Selections at Charles Town.

Dear Al:

Horses belonging to H. C. Langley have been barred from racing over this track, stewards announced. A statement detrimental to the best interests of racing is said to have caused the ruling. The boys in the press box have nicknamed the odds board "The Show Boat." The board has a pilot house from where the time is displayed, a smokestack to keep the men warm and a rudder formed by the daily-double board. I've heard of a lot of hot things at tracks but this is the first time I ever saw one of them so hot that the odds board smoked. There will be a turkey dinner at the high school tomorrow night for the benefit of St. James' Church. There was a lot of booing following the third race today; the outside horse was in the position that brought so many photo decisions. I was right on the line and Nay Nay was the winner without doubt. However, I can't blame the customers who have been educated by inaccurate cameras in Maryland. No. 2 post position is getting a lot of play here. Check the results so far and No. 2 has won a majority of the races. Pork Chops hasn't shown up at this meeting. He's going to school down in Fredericksburg, Va., and writes that he will be on hand for the session next summer. Some of the assistant starters are holding two horses. They don't know that Steward Bradley and I have a rule that one man can hold only one horse.

star game between the major circuits be awarded to Cincinnati. The American League is expected to follow custom and voice its approval, with the game again scheduled to be played early in July. The American League picked the site in 1937.

The dead ball issue was discussed, but both circuits will continue debate on this question tomorrow.

After a meeting lasting almost five hours, American League club owners today voted to open their 1938 baseball season April 19 and close October 2. Last season the opening and closing dates were a day later on each end.

Quite a battle developed over the Sunday doubleheader question, but the final ruling was prohibition of sabbath bargain bills until each club has played three Sunday games at home. It also was voted to continue the major-minor league agreement to January 1, 1942, the agreement's present expiration is next February 1. Should Kenesaw M. Landis, baseball commissioner, retire from office or die before 1942, the agreement would run for one year only after his departure.

President Will Harridge's term has three more years to run, but the A. L. moguls did some electing, renaming Col. Jacob Ruppert, of the New York Yankees, to the league vice presidency. Directors named, besides Col. Ruppert, were Alva Bradley, Cleveland; Tom Yawkey, Boston, and Lou Comiskey, Chicago.

Pensions were voted to Umpires Bill Dinneen and George Hildebrand. Dinneen's retirement was announced today; Hildebrand retired in 1934.

Practically ev ry National League club favors a deader pellet, while only the New York Yankees, Detroit Tigers and Philadelphia Athletics reportedly are holding out for retention of the "rabbit" sphere. Final action on the question, also reported under discussion by the junior circuit, could come only at a joint meeting of the leagues Wednesday.

The re-election of Frick as National League head for a three-year term was seen as a vote of confidence for the young executive, named to succeed John A. Heydler for one year in 1934 and then elected for two years in 1935. Sam Breadon, president of the St. Louis Cardinals, was re-elected vice president for one year, the term for which Harvey Traband was renamed secretary-treasurer.

The following men were named to the senior circuit's board of directors: William E. Benswanger, of the Pittsburgh Pirates; Horace C. Stoneham, of the New York Giants; P. K. Wrigley, of the Chicago Cubs, and Robert A. Quinn, of the Boston Bees.

Formal American League action with Harridge's term having a year to run, was confined to the acceptance of the retirement of Umpire William Dineen. Bill Grieve, umpire in the American Association last season, will fill the veteran's place.

As American League club owners discussed routine problems in closed session, reports of deals involving Detroit, Cleveland, the Boston Red Sox and St. Louis Browns circulated through the Palmer House lobby.

The hottest one, with Detroit meeting with officials of the Browns during the morning, had Detroit offering Herman Clifton, infielder, Chet Laabs, outfielder, and cash for hard-hitting Roy "Beau" Bell.

During the afternoon, Bill Terry, New York Giant's manager, conferred with Burleigh Grimes, Brooklyn pilot, adding to the fog which has drifted about the oft-heard report that Brooklyn's Van Lingle Mungo, pitching star, was due for a change of scenery. Some observers were inclined to believe that Mungo would have to try and pal it off with Grimes another season, but the Chicago Cubs, Pittsburgh Pirates and Giants still were in the market for the temperamental flinger's services.

Two actual transactions, both of a minor nature, were made by National League teams during the dull day. Cincinnati sold Catcher Gilly Campbell to Montreal, of the International League, and John Niggeling, right-handed hurler, was bought by Boston's Bees from Newark, the New York Yankee farm.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 6.—Five of a team of 13 Washington amateur boxers advanced through their trials rounds in the Eastern finals of the all-America championship series here tonight.

Featuring the performances of the Capital City fighters was the quick knockout Bobby Schwarts, the light-heavyweight, registered over Ed Malan, of Baltimore, a one-round knockout, one of the quickest and most decisive of the night.

Carroll Wright came through to take a three-round decision over Herbie Foutts, of Smith Hill, New York, in the 135-pound class; Buster Miller swept through with a three-round win over Petey Boyce, of Baltimore, in the 126-pound class, and Gilbert Mayo scored a three-round knockout over Danny Larusso, of New York, in the 118-pound class.

Larry Bolvin, Providence flyweight, eliminated William Tapp, of Washington, in the 112-pound class, and Homer Robichaud, of Worcester, Mass., took a three-round verdict over William Banks. Ray Arrington, of Baltimore, eliminated Wyman Stewart in the 126-pound class in a thrilling three-round bout, and William Moore defeated Billy Carrigan, of Baltimore, in three rounds.

Bobby Mathias, National Guard 147-pounder, defeated Raymond Hardy, colored, also of Washington, by a technical knockout in 1 minute and 5 seconds of the second round, advancing to the simifinals.

for the league title. The Giants, with the best defensive record in the league, were the favorites. All season they had yielded only 60 points. That afternoon they yielded 49 points to Flaherty's Redskins, who turned on a torrent of touchdowns.

For some reason or other it has never been the habit of Washington folks to refer to the Washington team as Flaherty's Redskins in much the same manner that Pitt is called Jock Sutherland's team, or the Irish of South Bend were called Knute Rockne's Notre Dame club. But it might well be called Flaherty's team.

Because the Redskins were a ne'er-do-well bunch before Flaherty took hold last season. The stocky Irishman from the Coast, paradoxically red-headed and soft spoken, needled spark and cohesion into the team. And he signed players and made trades that transformed the Redskins into a well-rounded club.

And he has contacts. He never could spare time from his coaching duties to scout Sammy Baugh in action with Texas Christian University, but he had friends in the football world who did. Seven other teams in the league, with first choice in the draft, passed Baugh up, but not Flaherty. And when Baugh balked at signing, Flaherty virtually forced George Marshall to take the rubber off the bankroll and meet Baugh's terms.

When it was necessary to scout the Chicago Cardinals for an early game in Washington this season, Flaherty had a friend who would do the job for him. And that friend happened to be one of the best football coaches in the business, a master of the scouting art, Head Coach Gus Dorais, of Detroit University.

In New York, Flaherty could have had his pick of a dozen famed football authorities who would have scouted the Giants for him. These he passed up, gave the job to one of his pals who was a high school coach in Manhattan. How well that fellow tabbed the Giants' plays for the Redskins is history. Fact is, most of the time up there at the Polo Grounds it appeared as if the Redskins knew the Giants' plays better than the Giants did.

He gets along with his ball team, too. He knows where to distribute his censure, his praise, and for his ball players he is a model of decisiveness. Actually, in Cleveland three weeks ago, during his absence from the dressing room, the Redskins took a solemn vow to win that day's game for Flaherty.

When the Giants threatened to wipe out the Redsknis' 21-0 lead and gain at least the tie that would deprive the Washington team of a championship game, Flaherty had a play that would stave off that threat. Remember how the Giants had suddenly become "hot," how they scored two quick touchdowns in the third quarter and cut the Redskins' lead to 21-14. Well, that was when Flaherty struck back.

The best thing that could happen to the Redskins at that time was a Redskin touchdown. And by Flaherty they had been given the play that would make it. All afternoon Sammy Baugh had been aiming his passes to Charlie Malone over the center of the line. They "set up" the climax play with two more Baugh-to-Malone passes. Then, as Baugh faded back and the panicky Giants rushed to cover Malone, Ed Justice slipped into the flat zone almost unobserved and in a twinkling had not only the ball but the touchdown that beat the Giants.

Smart guy, that Flaherty.

Armstrong Kayoes Foe; Ambers Wins

Cleveland, Dec. 6 (AP).—Henry Armstrong, slugging featherweight champion, knocked out Tony Chavez, claimant of the Mexican featherweight title, in the first round of their scheduled ten-round non-championship bout here tonight. A crowd of 12,000 saw the fights.

Lightweight Champion Lou Ambers, of Herkimer, N. Y., who punched out a ten-round decision over Cleveland's Frankie Wallace in the preceding bout of the Cleveland News' annual toy fund boxing show, had hardly reached the rubbing table when the Chavez knockout was announced.

Unanimous Verdict for N.Y. Battler

By Bob Garrison.

For as Benny Leonard's protege trounced the tenth ranking national lightweight in eight rounds there streaked across the canvas the lanky figure of a 20-year-old red-haired boxer bearing the every trait of a future champion. Fourteen hundred persons sat in on the preview.

More than that, there appeared a second edition of a man who had ruled the same class of fighters two decades previously—Benny Leonard. Trained almost to perfection, Dunne, through assimilation, has developed into a reproduction of a man who couldn't be beaten. Leonard has instilled in him every trick of the trade.

In beating Scott, it might be said that Dunne needed quite a few of those tricks. The Cowboy, a ring-wise veteran who held Champion Lou Ambers to two close decisions within the last year, was a tough assignment for Dunne, but the New Yorker had considerably less trouble than did the Champion.

Scott Knocked Down.

From the third round it was apparent that Dunne was to win his fourth straight local bout. Scott opened that round by rushing from his corner and aiming a flurry of blows at Dunne's mid-section. But on the third rush he ran smack into a lightning-like left that struck as fast as an electric locomotive and with about as much power. Down went Scott and his victory hopes.

It put the Cowboy on the cautious side and gave Dunne a chance to land with his left at will and cross with his right when Scott concentrated his defense on the rapier-like left. In the sixth Dunne worked on his foe's mid-section, forcing Scott to lower his guard, then cagily scored with rights to the head.

Scott's offensive consisted of a hard right-hand blow, but it never bothered Dunne because he either tied up the Cowboy in a clinch after receiving or rolled with them and landed himself. He looked like a champion.

Cormier Beats Calp.

Vernon Cormier, whose claim to fame is his boast that he experienced 25 rounds of action with Freddie Miller when the latter was ruler of the featherweights, pounded—and pounded—out a unanimous decision over Calvin Calp, Baltimore, in the eight-round semi-windup.

Calp, though plainly outpointed, proved a clever performer, however. While his aggressive foe was chasing him about with a barrage of of rights and lefts, Calp staked his all on short, quick rights, but could not manage to land often enough.

After being floored in the third from a corner beating, Calp collapsed from fatigue in the fifth and while sustaining a nine count proceeded to map out a ratalitory offense. It might be said he played 'possum. For he arose, staggered for effect, and met his foe with that terrific right that spun Cormier and saved the day.

Once before in the fourth while back-pedalling, Calp brought one from around the corner and floored his itinerant New England opponent. So things were nip and tuck up to the sixth, when Calp slowed up and began missing with his dynamiting right. Cormier continued his buzz-saw attack, but found Calp's a chin of iron and had to be content with a decision.

Because his opponent, Paul Pross, Max Schmeling's Pompton Lakes, N. J., sparring partner, chose to quit in the second round, Murray Kanner, Washington's Jewish heavyweight hope, was awarded a technical knockout after 2 minutes and 25 seconds of a bout scheduled for 6 rounds.

Thouge string-bean in statue Kanner hit the heavier Pros so hard, straight and often that when he bloodied his face and floored him for nine Pross gave up. He quit while on the floor the second time. He merely arose, spit blood, and informed Ray Bowen that he had a sufficiency.

Kanner was allowed the decision, by the District Boxing Commission which went into a hurried session, but Pross' purse was ordered withheld and he was limited to expenses for his poor showing.

In a four-round preliminary, Maynard Daniels, Washington Marine, won from Joe Casper, Baltimore heavyweight, by a technical knockout after 1 minute and 50 seconds of the last round.

In another preliminary of the same distance, Joe Walker, Vince Dundee's Baltimore protege, outlasted Vince Bonoviri, former local lightweight Golden Glove champion, to win a unanimous decision.

Y. M. C. A. Games.

The second week's play in the Government-Y Basketball League, scheduled for tonight on the "Y" court, finds State Department and A. G. O. (War Department) favored to continue their victory march, after having little trouble taking their opening games.

Games scheduled for tonight: State Department vs. G. A. O. (Post-office Division), 7:10; Bureau of Standards vs. A. G. O. (War Department), 8:20, and National Archives vs. Interstate Commerce Commission, 9:30.

Fatal Organism Tested to Halt Baby Epidemic

By the United Press.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—A deadly organism found in the blood of one of the tiny victims and injected into the bodies of eight white mice gave medical science tonight its first hope that it may find the source of the disease which has taken the lives of 11 babies.

The blood was taken from the body of 19-day-old Daniel Ennesser.

Permission to perform an autopsy on Daniel's body was granted by his parents in the hope, they said, that through him physicians might save seven other babies seriously ill.

Dr. Herman Bundesen, president of the Chicago Board of Health, ordered the injections on the mice and announced:

"We have found a particularly virulent organism which we cannot yet classify. The mice upon which the experiment was performed all died within a few hours of the injection.

"We are taking throat and other cultures of the living babies now to see if we can find the same organism in them."

The ailment, characterized by inflamation of the intestines and vomiting, comes in epidemic form. The last time it appeared in Chicago was in 1904 when nearly a score of babies died. It has appeared since in New York City and Europe.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Organ recital by D. Sterling Wheelwright in the Washington Chapel Monday night. Program: "Fountain Reverie" (Fletcher), Organ Concerto No. 6 (Handel), Londonderry Air (arr. Lemare). "Through Deepening Trials" (Careless), Concert Overture in C (Hollins).

Judging from last evening's impression, the triweekly recitals by D. Sterling Wheelright in the Washington Chapel of Latter-Day Saints are occasions for the tranquil and informal enjoyment of organ music with a program just long enough to leave the auditor in the pleasant condition of being satisfied while the appetite is still unsatisfied. As is the custom on Mondays, early arrivals to the number of more than a score were seated in the choir loft behind the console to hear the organist's brief analysis of the compositions to be played.

British composers exclusively were placed on last evening's program which had for its major item the sixth concerto of George Frederick Handel, who was the first to try the combination of organ and orchestra. Like many composers of his day, he wrote considerable absolute music which could be performed by various combinations of instruments without loss of essential values. Thus, his first collection of concertos, published in 1738, were titled "for harpsichord or organ."

Like Shakespeare, Handel did not scruple to take his themes (of musical plots) from any handy source and then transmute them by his genius. Moreover, he frequently borrowed from himself, taking an aria from one of his operas for use in an oratorio. According to Hugo Leichtentritt, the sixth concerto was originally composed for the harpist, Powell, and later arranged for organ. Be that as it may, in its final form it is thoroughly adapted to the king of instruments.

The short pieces on the program included Fletcher's "Fountain Reverie" with a sustained melody under softly flowing arpeggios. Edwin H. Lemare's finely harmonized version of the beautiful Irish air from County Derry, a "Mormon" hymn by George Careless, the London organist and composer who became director of the Tabernacle choir in 1864, and a dramatic overture by Alfred Hollins, the Scottish musician, whose blindness was no bar to his virtuosity at the console and no impediment to his inspiration in writing agreeable music.

Half U. S. Counties Get Nurse Service

Public health nursing services have been established by the Red Cross in more than half the counties of the Nation, the National Committee on Red Cross Nursing Service was told at its annual meeting here yesterday.

"During the past ten years, 12,000,000 visits have been made to or on behalf of the sick, and this number is consistently increasing," said Miss I. Malinde Havey, director of the Red Cross Public Health Nursing and Home Hygiene Service.

Miss Ida F. Butler presided as active chairman of the committee. Delegates were welcomed by Admiral Cary T. Grayson, chairman of the Red Cross, Miss Mabel T. Boardman, secretary, and Mrs. August Belmont, of the Central Committee.

Two Tinners Overcome By Gas While Working

Two tinners, overcome by charcoal gas yesterday while working at Bladensburg road and Morse street northeast, were treated at Casualty Hospital.

The men, Charles P. McIntosh, 50, 3922 Twelfth street northeast, and Hoyt D. Smith, 27, 1329 Eleventh street northwest, told police the gas escaped from a fire pot they were using. Their conditions were not serious.

Camera Club to Show.

A collection of 110 photographic prints submitted in a contest of the Lens and Shutter Club of George Washington University will be placed on exhibition this morning at 2021 G street northwest. A grand prize of a loving cup and three ribbon prizes in the three classes of the contest, pictorial, portrait and candid studies, will be presented at the meeting tomorrow evening of the club.

Redskins—Sure! But Who's in the Senate

With the scalps of the New York Giants dangling from their belts, the Eastern champions captured the town's imagination while they made ready for the "world's professional" title game in Chicago Sunday.

Up in the galleries of the Senate, according to the Associated Press, excited ushers pointed down to white-haired Texas Jack Garner and whispered to the spectators:

"That's the Vice President. He comes from Texas—you know, the home of Slinging Sammy Baugh."

Over in Statuary Hall the guides singled out the marble likeness of James A. Garfield and added with a flourish:

And when the word Washington was mentioned the fans thought, not of the D. C. one, but the Pacific Coast Washington, home of Washington State University, whence came the Redskins' 255-pound captain, Turk Edwards.

Pieces of the New York goal posts which 7,000 cheering Washingtonians brought back from Sunday's 49-to-14 victory fetched better prices as souvenirs than models of the Capitol dome.

And 5,000 other residents of the District—who waited in a midnight rain to welcome the team home Sunday night—went about the city muttering:

"I saw 'em—the Redskins."

Newspapers Set New Peak In Circulation

Royal Bank Economist Analyzes 50 U. S. Cities, 10 in Canada.

Montreal, Dec. 6.—In the monthly letter of the Royal Bank of Canada, issued today, Dr. Donald W. Marvin, economist, calls attention to the record circulation increase of newspapers in the United States and Canada. The gain has been so rapid, he says, that the value of each line of advertising has increased much more than the advertising cost. Dr. Marvin says:

"In the United States and Canada during 1937, newspaper circulation surpassed all prevous records. Where many other business activiteis declined by 30, 40 or 50 per cent during the depression, the decline in newspaper circulation amounted to only about 5 per cent in Canada and 11 per cent in the United States. This loss in circulation occasioned by the depression has been more than overcome and the characteristic expansion has been resumed.

"The steady growth in demand for newspapers should be of particular interest to merchants and manufacturers, since it indicates that in spite of the competition of news broadcasts the newspaper is continuing to make headway in popular esteem.

"Statistics of the circulation of the leading newspapers of 50 cities in the United States and ten cities in Canada were obtained through the courtesy of the N. W. Ayer Advertising Agency. In these 60 cities the daily circulation of the selected papers rose from 19,300,000 in 1926 to 21,700,000 in 1928. In Canada the rise persisted until 1931, and the subsequent decline during the depression amounted to 5 per cent. In the United States there was a slight decline in 1929, a further rise to a record peak in 1930 and the decline which followed amounted to about 11 per cent.

"As with a number of other business activities, the recession was somewhat less severe in Canada than in the United States and recovery carried Canadian figures to new high levels more quickly than was the case in the United States.

16 Per Cent Gain in U. S.

"Between 1926 and 1937 the gain in newspaper circulation in the United State amounted to 16 per cent, and in Canada during the corresponding period the gain was 23 per cent. It is notable that in Canada the rate of expansion during these 11 years was in excess of the rate of growth in population and that in the United States it was almost exactly equal to that rate.

"In terms advertising lineage, and therefore of revenue, the newspapers of the United States do not seem to have achieved a recovery comparable with that which has taken place in their circulation. In 1929, according to data compiled by the New York Evening Post, the newspapers of 52 cities in the United States published 158,000,000 agate lines of advertising per month. This fell to a low of 89,000,000 lines in 1933. In 1935 the number of lines per month amounted to 100,000,000 and in 1936 to 115,000,000. If the comparative level of the first eight months is maintained it will amount to about 120,000,000 lines in 1937, or to about 75 per cent of the amount published in 1929.

"Although the last few months have witnessed a sharp increase in rates charged per line for advertising space in both Canada and the United States, and rates are well above those of 1929, total advertising space and newspaper revenue is still below that of 1929. In the United States it is probably true that the amount which business is budgeting for advertising is not yet at 1929 levels. Certainly the heavy amounts being spent for radio advertising constitute another important cause of this retarded gain."

Steel Output At 3-Year Low

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week declined 2.1 points to 27.5 per cent of capacity, compared with 29.6 per cent last week, the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated today.

A month ago operations averaged 41.0 per cent, while a year ago the date was 76.6 per cent of capacity.

The dip marked the twelfth consecutive weekly decline and carried the indicated production date to the lowest since the week of November 12, 1934, when it was 27.3 per cent.

Moreover, it occurred in the face of suggestions from steel trade authorities that the 29.6 per cent level of last week marked the bottom of the decline.

New York Life Plans Cut in Loan Rate

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—The New York Life Insurance Co., one of the largest in its field, today announced its officers will recommend to directors reduction of the interest rate on loans to policyholders from 6 to 5 per cent.

The reduction would not go into effect until next year and would be applicable only to new policies.

Woolworth Sales Gain.

New York, Dec. 6 (AP).—Retail sales of F. W. Woolworth Co. in November totaled $25,143,275, an increase of 5.2 per cent over the same period in 1936.

Buying Rush Carries Wheat 2½ Cts. Higher

Argentina Reports Small Available Surplus For Export.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 6.—In a buying rush, due to the lowest authoritative estimate yet on Argentina's exportable surplus, Chicago wheat prices jumped 2½ cents today, but afterward reacted.

R. O. Cromwell, Chicago crop expert, telephoned from Buenos Aires that there would be only 25,000,000 bushels of Argentine wheat available this season for shipment to Europe. Heavy selling here, however, to realize profits resulted from the bulge in values, and led to setbacks of more than a cent from the day's top price level.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Work Irregularly Lower in Dull Trading; Wheat Prices Advance.

New York, Dec. 6.—Stocks were dull and irregularly lower in one of the most spiritless markets of the current season. Turnover was less than a million shares. United States bonds were unsettled. May wheat rose 1⅜ cents to 94 cents a bushel.

Stagnation in the stock market, it may be hoped, is not a good reflection of the general expectation with regard to business even though most persons now look for no better than moderate activity this winter. Stock trading gave little indication that larger purchasing would follow further reduction in margin requirements, or for that matter, any other action of the authorities looking to easing of credit or making jobs for money. At the same time the apathy of traders suggests that now would be an auspicious time for retracing some of the deflationary steps taken in the days of greater activity.

On the trade side the news continued to tell of declining activity in heavy industry, but in steel, for example, the retreat has slowed down to a walk. This week's operating rate, according to the estimate of the American Iron & Steel Institute, will be 27½ per cent of capacity, against 29.6 per cent in the previous week. The fall of 7.1 per cent was not so large as that recently suffered. A year ago the industry was rising and running at 76.6 per cent of capacity.

Holiday Prospects.

The year-end holidays quite possibly will see still lower levels for steel and some of the other heavy industries, but that period indeed could mark the bottom. By the early part of next year inventories probably will be well reduced and an increase in purchasing is altogether likely, especially if in the meantime something concrete be done to help the public utilities and the railroads be given higher freight rates. On the legislative side the news that the wages and hours bill would be delayed, and possibly rewritten, at least caused no sorrow in the markets.

Finance was concerned mainly with the announcement of the new Treasury financing. The Treasury, in presenting for subscription an eight-year 2½ per cent bond, fell exactly into the groove of market expectations and there was no surprise when the bonds brought a premium of more than 1 per cent in the forward market. The same was true of the supplementary five year 1¾ per cent note issue. What did surprise the markets somewhat was the fact that the eight-year bonds were noncallable. Apparently that meant the Treasury view that the bottom in interest rates is here and the generous terms of the two issues came from realization that the market is vulnerable. The Treasury can no longer afford to cut sharp corners.

In the foreign exchange market the pound sterling rose sharply, for a variety of reasons. The most popular were that the French were buying to meet their railway loan installment, and that the United States Treasury was buying silver. Meanwhile, the price of foreign silver fell abruptly on foreign fears that the international agreements to limit offerings to the market for Government account might not be extended on expiration at the year end.

Common Stocks.

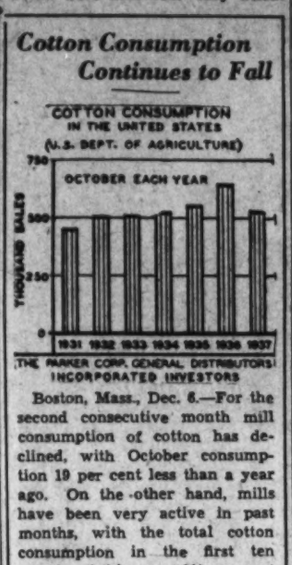
While common stocks slogged around without purpose, some investment buying of preferred issues lifted prices 2 points or more in a number of instances. Preferred issues to show strength were Cuban American Sugar, American Smelting, General Cable, International Harvester, New York Shipbuilding, New York Steam, Pittsburgh Coke & Iron, Remington Rand, Republic Steel and United States Steel.

On opening sales the industrial leaders began a point or so lower. In the list were Steel, Chrysler, Bethlehem and General Motors, but their tone improved in the later trading. Airplane issues had a good day and some of the gold mines were shoved ahead. Dome made a new high. Steel shares in general were hurt by the further fall in the steel industry's operating rate. Rails softened perceptibly, and probably the reason there was the further fall in car loadings, a factor which is taking the zest away from the expectation of higher rates on the traffic which remains.

Patino Mines was pushed forward more than a point on the special dividend, announced shortly before the close. Allied Chemical was dull, selling only once up to late in the hour. Only the regular dividend was declared. Rumors have gone round of a special distribution.

Although the friends of tighter Federal regulation of the securities markets emphasized the sections of the new regulations promulgated by the Federal Reserve Board which seem to patch up the fences, the general impression was that another step toward leniency had been taken. Permission of brokerage house clients to withdraw a portion of the cash involved in the sale of securities in restricted accounts will tend to relieve tension somewhat. Just now not many accounts are in the restricted class, compared to the situation of a month ago, thanks to the liquidation that has taken place, the lower margin requirement and the improvement in prices. Actually the new rules will not affect prices one way or the other.

Cotton Consumption Continues to Fall



Boston, Mass., Dec. 6.—For the second consecutive month mill consumption of cotton has declined, with October consumption 19 per cent less than a year ago. On the other hand, mills have been very active in past months, with the total cotton consumption in the first ten months of this year 12½ per cent greater than in the same 1936 months.

WOL Weighs Chillum as Site For Big Station

By Thomas M. Cahill.

William B. Dolph, general manager of station WOL in Washington, announced yesterday that test surveys are being conducted near Chillum, Md., to determine one of three locations under consideration as a site for its new 1,000-watt transmitter, which the station will erect in the near future.

A construction permit for the increased power unit was granted to the station last week by the Federal Communications Commission. On the site selected two 230-foot towers will be erected, together with a building to house the transmitter equipment and an emergency studio. The station's main studio will remain in the Heurich Building at 1627 K street northwest.

Mr. Dolph stated that his company is investing in excess of $50,000 in the new station. The equipment used represents the latest developments in radio engineering, and the new plant is expected to be in operation by May 1. It was explained that the station's signal in the Northwest Washington area will be quadrupled in its intensity.

Station Locally Owned.

Because of the growth in the area of metropolitan Washington in the past few years, a more powerful station was needed to serve adequately the general public, which now represents one of the first ten purchasing areas in the United States. Station WOL, owned and operated by the American Broadcasting Co., of which LeRoy Mark is president, began operating in 1928.

This station is the only locally owned and operated broadcaster in the city. Although it originates all Congressional and Presidential broadcasts for the coast-to-coast network of the Mutual Broadcasting System, it continues to maintain its local station policy by co-operating in broadcasts of strictly Washington interests. Among these are the daily metropolitan police flashes, services from the Central Union Mission and many local church services.

Farm Foreclosures Drop.

Reduction in farm foreclosures is announced by A. S. Goss, Land Bank commissioner of the Farm Credit Administration, who reports that in August they were the smallest for any month during the last four years.

During the month foreclosures throughout the country by all lenders numbered but 2,991. For the third quarter of 1937 foreclosures totaled 9,719, compared with 12,560 for the corresponding period in 1936, a decline of 23 per cent. The current estimate, Mr. Goss said, is the smallest for any three-month period since data were first compiled in 1933.

"With the exception of loans by the Land Bank commissioner," Mr. Goss stated, "foreclosures have shown a decline on all types of loans during the third quarter of 1937, compared with a year ago. Federal Land Bank foreclosures declined 34 per cent, while the total of private lenders declined 26 per cent and was 47 per cent below the corresponding period of 1934.

"The increase in Land Bank commissioner foreclosures is accounted for to a considerable extent by the aging of the loans. When compared with the total farm mortgage debt held, the Federal Land Banks continue to show the lowest rate of foreclosure, while commercial banks show the highest."

Four-Year Low Record.

Mr. Goss also explained that the number of farm mortgages being recorded throughout the country during the third quarter of 1937, which include both new loans and renewals, was less than for any other three-month period during the last four years for which data are available. The total recorded during the three months ended September 30, 1937, is estimated at $159,000,000, or 5 per cent less than a year ago and 61 per cent less than during the third quarter of 1934.

Christmas Savings.

An unofficial survey of local banks having Christmas Savings Clubs indicates considerable enrollment in the new clubs which were opened last week. Several banks reported no comparative decrease in membership for the present and one insti-

Cotton Steady; Range Narrow

New York Dec. 6 (AP).—Cotton bobbed around today over a range of 4 to 7 points, and closed 3 points net higher to 1 lower. March advanced from 7.88 to 7.95, ending at 7.93.

The market opened 1 to 4 points lower, responding to easier foreign markets and larger private crop estimates, which ranged from 18,330,000 to 18,601,000 bales.

Evening up in anticipation of the Government report Wednesday accounted for a fair part of the business. Trade buying was the principal supporting factor. Volume of hedging was not large. But support toward the close enabled several months to finish at highs for the day.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1937—

TRUSTEES' SALE OF TWO-STORY BRICK DWELLING, SEVEN ROOMS AND BATH, HOT-WATER HEAT, NO. 3021 ALLEN PLACE NORTHWEST.

By virtue of a deed of trust recorded in Liber No. 6814, folio 137, et seq., one of the land records of the District of Columbia, and at the request of party secured thereby, the undersigned trustees will offer for sale by public auction, in front of premises, on MONDAY, THE THIRTEENTH DAY OF DECEMBER, 1937, AT FOUR-FIFTEEN O'CLOCK P. M., the following-described property in the District of Columbia, to-wit: Lot 5 in Cecelia M. Coughlin and others' subdivision of Block 8, "Park View Terrace," as per plat recorded in the office of the Surveyor for the District of Columbia in Liber County 18 at folio 32; subject to the building restriction lines as shown on said plat. Said Block 8 now known for purposes of assessment and taxation as Square 2844. Subject to the right of redemption by the maker of the aforesaid deed of trust, her heirs and assigns, within a period of sixty days from the date of sale, not excluding Sundays and holidays, as provided in said deed of trust.

TERMS OF SALE: One-third of the purchase money to be paid in cash, balance in equal installments, represented by promissory notes of purchaser payable in one and two years, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, from day of sale, payable semiannually, secured by first deed of trust upon property sold, or all cash, at option of purchaser. A deposit of $500.00 required of purchaser at sale. Examination of title, conveyancing, recording, revenue stamps and notarial fees at cost of purchaser. Terms to be complied with within ten days from expiration of redemption period, otherwise trustees reserve the right to resell property at risk and cost of defaulting purchaser, after five days advertisement of such resale in some newspaper published in Washington, D. C., or deposit may be forfeited, or without forfeiting deposit trustees may avail themselves of any legal or equitable rights against defaulting purchaser.

Bob Burns Says—

Almost any young student of navigation can steer a ship safely out in the open water, but it takes a seasoned old sailor to steer safely through hidden reefs and treacherous currents. It's pretty much the same in business.

One of the most cautious men I ever knew was my Uncle Orchie. The other day, when the mailman delivered a package to him and told him to sign a receipt, he studied the receipt for 30 minutes before he finally signed it.

When I asked him why he did that, he says "Well, ever since I signed my marriage certificate, I've made it a rule to read over all papers carefully."
